Harvard College Library

FROM THE BEQUEST OF FRANCIS BROWN HAYES
Class of 1839

OF LEXINGTON, MASSACHUSETTS
TĀRIKH-I-SORĀTH

A HISTORY

OF THE

PROVINCES OF SORĀTH AND HĀLĀR

IN KĀTHIĀWĀD.

BY RANCHOĐJI AMARJI,

DIVĀN OF JUNĀGADH.

Translated from the Persian.

BOMBAY:

Educ. Soc. Press, & Thacker & Co., Ltd.

London: Teubner & Co.

1882.
PREFACE.

The Tārikh-i-Sorāth, or History of Sorāth and Hālār, forming the western portion of Kāthiāwād, was compiled by Ranchodji Amarji, Divān or prime minister of Junāgaḍh, about 1825, and gives a pretty circumstantial account of the factions and broils that disturbed these provinces during the lifetime of the author and his father. As a genuine native history, written by a man who took a leading part in most of the events he describes, and who was quite independent of English influence, it ought to possess some interest for all classes of readers.

The Persian MS. of the work was brought to my notice by the late Mr. Gokalji Jhālā, then Divān of Junāgaḍh, on my visit to that place in May 1869. Mr. Manilāl Govindrām, now of the Bhāvanagar High School, also obtained for me a loan of a translation of it into Gujarāṭi, and made a careful version from it into English. When this was about complete I got a second Persian MS., and submitted both MSS. and the translation of the Gujarāṭi version to Mr. E. Rehatsek, who very kindly produced another translation, more in accordance with the Persian original than Mr. Manilāl’s founded on the Gujarāṭi only. This lay past for some time, but a few years ago I began to print it, and Colonel J. W. Watson, of the Râjasthânik Court, Râjkot, whose knowledge of the country and its history as well as of the language of the original, eminently qualified him for doing so—very kindly agreed to revise the MS. and look over the proofs as the book passed through the press. The alterations he has made to bring it into accordance with the better copies of the original work in his possession, have been numerous and important.

It was intended to add a considerable amount of additional collateral information to the work as it passed through the press, but frequent—almost constant—absence from the vicinity of any library, and the pressure of work which has frequently interrupted even the printing for long periods of time, have limited the additional matter to a brief introduction and a few notes scattered throughout the book, and amounting in all to about 57 pages.

I have only to add that it is to the offers of patronage of the work on the part of the Chiefs of Junâgâdh and Bhâvanagar, that the publication of it is due.

J. BURGESS.

_Amarâvati, Krishnâ District,
31st December 1881._
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTION, by the Editor</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TĀRĪKH-I-SORĀTH</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Description of the Sirkār of Junāgaṇḍh</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Note 1. On Junāgaṇḍh, by the Editor</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translations of the Asoka edicts</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Note 2. Nemināṭha</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahāls which pay all the Land and Customs Revenue Rights to Junāgaṇḍh</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Kasbah of Kutiānā</td>
<td>49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bāntwā</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Kasbah of Māṅgrol</td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Note 3. On Ghumli or Bhumli</td>
<td>58</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kesod</td>
<td>62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Māliā</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chorvāḍ</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paṭṭan Diva</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Note 4. On Paṭṭan Somanāṭha</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. On Ahīyābāī</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account of Koḍinār</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unā and Delvāḍā</td>
<td>79</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account of Rānpur</td>
<td>79</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Visāvadar</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muzaffarābāḍ</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The island of Diva, which formerly belonged to Junāgaṇḍh</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account of Kāṭhiāwāḍ</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTENTS</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account of Amrêli</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account of the Mahâls which pay tribute</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to Junâgaîdh</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Description of Gondal</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rajkot</td>
<td>94</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morbi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Description of Bhâvanagar</td>
<td>95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Description of Jhâlâwâr</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Râjas of Junâgaîdh</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rao Dayat and Kuvar Naughan</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naughan conquers Sindh</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Râja Khengâr</td>
<td>109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mularâja and Naughan</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fight of Râja Mañdalika with Mahmud Ghaznavi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hamiradéva, Vijayapâla, Naughan, &amp;c.</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jayasingh, &amp;c.</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sultân Mahmud captures Râja Mañdalika</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The story of Mehtâ Narsî</td>
<td>118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Râja Bhupat Singh bin Mañdalika</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Râja Khengâr, Râja Naughan, Râja Śrî Singh,</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Râja Khengâr</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Note 6. On the Chudâsama dynasty</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Governors on behalf of the Pâdishâhs of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aḥmadâbâd</td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Navâb Bahâdur Khân Bâbi</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Navâb Mahâbat Khân</td>
<td>143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Captivity of the Navâb Mahâbat Khân</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shekh Miyan takes Verâval</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

The Divanship of Amarji ...................... 147
Demolition of Dilkhâniâ.......................... 149
Acquisition of Kutiânâ.......................... 149
Conquest of Talâjâ .............................. 150
Conquest of the four forts of Mangrol .. 151
Liberation of the Mutasaddis of Kachh Bhuj 152
Punishment of the Vâghars and Mâliâs .. 153 Punishment of the Bâbriâs and of the Unâ
Qasbâtis .......................... 154
Kumbhâji attacks the Divânji............. 154 Imprisonment of the Divânji and murder of Jamadâr Sâlîmin the Arab ............. 155
The Navâb marches against Mangrol and recalls the Divânji .......................... 156 Conquest of Sutrâpâdâ .......................... 159
Conquest of Posisrâ .......................... 159
Navâb Hâmid Khân (A.D. 1774-1810) ... 160
Victory over the Subahdars of the Peshvâ and Gâekvâd................................. 161
March to Pâlanswâ in Vâgaî, &c. ......... 163 Victory over Jâm Jasâji, Râna Sulṭânji, and Kumbhâji .............................. 168
Murder of the Divân Amarji 1784, &c ... 172
Verâval taken from Divân Raghu-nâthji ... 177
The Navâb instigates the Arabs against the Divân .............................. 178
Gul Khân slain; marriage of the Navâb, &c. 179
Taking of Sutrâpâdâ .......................... 180 Conquest of Kesûj ............................ 181
CONTENTS.

Divân Raghunâth takes Chorvâd and Ve-râval, &c. .................................. 182
The Divânship of Kalyân Seth .......... 193
March of the Navâb against Bhâvanagar, 194
Jamâdâr Ámin cannonades Manjâvađi ... 195
Divân Raghunâth recalled from Nagar ... 196 Reduction of Kutiânâ, &c. ............... 197
Navâb Bahâdur Khân (1810-1839 a.d.) ... 205 Jamâdâr Omar and his expulsion by British aid............................................ 209
The taking of Kutiânâ ...................... 210
Marriage of Šambhu Parsâd .............. 212
Dismissal of Jamâdâr Omar .............. 213 Dismissal of Divân Raghunâth, and slaughter of Atîts ................................ 215
Divânship of Sundarji (1809-10 a.d.) ... 218
Death of Divân Raghunâth................ 219
Wedding of Kesarbâï ...................... 220
Interviews of Ranchodji and Governor
Elphinstone ................................ 221
Capture and release of Captain Grant... 222 Expulsion of Mr. Anderson from Dvârkâ, and punishment of the Waghers by the English........................................ 223 Chastisement of the Khumân Kâthis by the English .................................. 224 Defeat of Kesarbâï, and murder of Âhmâd
Khân Faqir .................................... 227
Events of Saṁvat 1880 (a.d. 1823-24) ... 228
CONTENTS.

Note 7. Capt. Grant’s Narrative of his captivity ........................................... 235

CONCERNING the HISTORY of NAGAR .................................................. 240
Concerning the Jâm ................................................................. 243
Founding of the city of Navânagar ................. 246
Jâm Raval bin Lâkhâ .......................... 246
Jâm Vîbhâji (A.D. 1561-1569) ................. 251
Jâm Sarasâl (A.D. 1569-1616) ................... 251
Jâm Jasâji (A.D. 1616-1624) ......................... 254
Jâm Lákhâ (A.D. 1624-1645) ......................... 254
Jâm Rañmalji (A.D. 1645-1661) ................. 256
Jâm Raisingh (A.D. 1661-1663) ...................... 256
Jâm Timâchi Tagadh (A.D. 1663-1690) ... 257
Jâm Lákhâji (A.D. 1690-1709) ...................... 257
Jâm Raisingh (A.D. 1709-1710) ...................... 259
Jâm Timâchi (A.D. 1710-1743) ...................... 259
Jâm Lákhâji (A.D. 1743-1768) ...................... 260
Jâm Jasâji (A.D. 1768-1814) ...................... 260
Jâm Jasâji makes a friend of Râo Sâheb Bhânji .................. 271

The laying waste of Gondal in Sam. 1850. 273
Meeting of Navâb Hâmid Khân with

Merâman Khâwâs ................................. 275
The Wâghêrs of Okhâ ................................. 276
Flight of Jâm Jasâji ................................. 277
Arrival of Fateh Muhammad Notiyâr ............... 279
Râo Sâheb Râidhanji comes to Nagar and returns disappointed ............... 280
Attack on Bhânwâd ................................. 282
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS.</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Jâm Jasâji collects aspurda (horse tax)</td>
<td>285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>from Kathiawâd, &amp;c.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capture of Kandorna fort</td>
<td>286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The English and Gâekwâd Governments</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>send armies to Nagar (A.D. 1812)</td>
<td>287</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Kachh army crosses over to Hâlâr</td>
<td>288</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jâm Satâji (A.D. 1814-1820)</td>
<td>292</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jâm Raûnâlji</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Account of Okhâ</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INTRODUCTION.

The peninsula of Kâthiâwâd or Saurashtra, lying between the gulfs of Kâchh and Cambay or Khambhât, and surrounded on the south and west by the Arabian Sea, is the holy land of Western India. It was known to the Greeks and Romans under the name of Saurastrâ; the Muhammadans called it by the Prakritized name of Soraçh, and to this day a large district in the south-west, a hundred miles in length, still retains that name. Another district, quite as large, to the east of the centre, however, has long been known as Kâthiâwâd, from having been overrun by the Kâthîs, who entered the peninsula from Kâchh, perhaps first in predatory bands in the thirteenth or fourteenth century; in the fifteenth the whole tribe was driven out of Kachh, and in that and the following century conquered a considerable territory. The Ma-râthâs, who came into contact with them in their forays, and were sometimes successfully repelled by them, extended the name of Kâthiâwâd to the whole province, and from them we have come to apply it in a similar wide sense; but by Brāhmaṇs and the natives it is still spoken of as Saurāṣṭra.
INTRODUCTION.

The extreme length of the peninsula, from Gogha in the east, to Jagat or Dwarka in the west, is nearly 220 miles; its greatest breadth is about 165 miles, and its area 22,000 square miles, with an estimated population of about two and a half millions.

It is divided into 188 separate states, large and small, of which thirteen pay no tribute; ninety-six are tributary to the British Government, seventy to that of the Gaikwād as the representative of the Marāṭhās, and nine pay tribute to both; while of the latter three classes one hundred and thirty-two pay a tax called Zortalabi to the Nawāb of Junāgaḍh. The states are arranged in seven classes, with varying civil and criminal powers,—five of the larger belonging to the first class.

Kāthiawār is usually divided into ten provinces or prāntas, of very unequal size:

(1.) Jhālāwād, in the north, containing about fifty states, of which Dhrangadhrā, Limbādi, Wadhwan, Wānkanēr, Sāelā, Chuḍā, and Thān-Laktar, are among the largest; originally it included Viramgaum, Māndal, and part of the Dhandhukā district now under Ahmadābād.

(2.) Machhukānthā, comprising Morbi and Maliā, lies to the west of Jhālāwād.

(3.) Hālār, in the north-west, derives its name from the Hālā branch of Jādejās from Kachh, and embraces twenty-six states, of which Jâmagnar or Nawânagar is the largest; Râjkot, Gondal-Dhoraji, Dharol, Drâphâ, &c., are smaller.

(4.) Okhâmandal, in the extreme west, belongs to Barodâ.*

(5.) Barâda or Jetwâp, along the south-west coast, is known also as Purbandar.

(6.) Sorath, in the south, is occupied by the Junâgaâdh State, and the two small holdings of Bântwâ and Amrâpur; but the sea-coast from Mângrol to the island of Diu or Div is also known as Nâgher.

(7.) Babriâwâp, so called from the Babriâ tribe of Kolês, is a hilly tract in the south-east, divided into many very small states, or village holdings, and includes many villages belonging to the Gaikwâd of Barodâ.

(8.) Kathiâwâp, near the middle, is a large district comprising Jetpur-Chital, Amreli, Jasadhan, Choṭilâ, Anandapur, and fifty other smaller estates.

(9.) Und-Sarveâ, lying along the Satruñjî river, and divided into small holdings.

(10.) Gohilwâp, in the east, along the shore of the gulf of Cambay, is so named from the Gohil Râjputs, who are the ruling race in it. It comprises the Goghâ district, belonging to the Ahmadâbâd Collectorate,—Bhaunagar, a first-class state, Pâlitânâ, Walâ, Lâthî, and many others; and it includes the old division of the province called Wâlãk.

* The island (bêt) of Šankhodâr belongs to Okhâmandal. It was long famous for its pirates.

Generally speaking, with the exception of the Thângâ and Mândhav hills in the west of Jhâlâwâd, the âlech and Dalasâ ranges in Hâlâr, the hill of Gop, and others, the northern portion of the country is flat; but in the south the Gir range runs nearly parallel with the coast, and at a distance of about twenty miles from it, along the north of Babriawâd and Sorrath, turning northwards towards Girnâr. Opposite this latter mountain, again, is the solitary Osam hill, and then still further west is the Baradâ group between Hâlâr and Baradâ, running about twenty miles north and south, from Ghumli to Râñâwâv, near which iron ore was dug in early times. After the limits of Babriawâd are passed a low range of hills succeeds the Gir; these hills join those of Und Sarveya. There is also a fine cluster of granite peaks at Chamârdi, and the Sihor and Khokhrâ ranges in the south-eastern portion of Gohilwâd.

The principal river is the Bhâdar, which rises in the Mândhav hills and flows south-west, falling into the sea at Navî-Bandar, in Baradâ, after a course of about a hundred and fifteen miles in a direct line, everywhere marked by the lands near its banks being in a high state of cultivation. It is a saying in the districts through which it passes that it receives ninety-nine tributary streams. From the same hills rises another Bhādar, which flows eastwards past Rāṇpur and Dhandhukā into the gulf of Cambay or Kambhāt, and in its short course attains a considerable size.
INTRODUCTION.

The Ājī, perhaps the prettiest stream in the province, rises near Sardhār and runs northwards past Rājkot, receiving the Māri from the left, and falls into the gulf of Kachh near Bālambā in Hālar. It is noted for the excellence of its water, and the gold dust found in small quantities in its bed.

The Machhu, from near Sardhār, flows north-west, through the district to which it gives name, past Wānkanēr and Morbī, into the gulf of Kachh, near Māliā.

The Wadhwān and Limbēlī Bhoğå was both rise in the Thāngā range, and flowing past Wadhwān and Limbēlī respectively lose themselves in the Raṇ to the north of the gulf of Cambay.

The Šatrūnjī, from the Gīr range, receives a large number of tributaries, and passes Pali-tānā and Talājā on its way to the entrance of the gulf of Kambhāt.

Saurāshṭrā was doubtless at a very early period brought under the influence of Brāhmaṇical civilization, and, from its position at the extreme north of the coast line of Western India, it was the most accessible to influences from the West. As early as the reign of the great Aśoka of Magadha (B.C. 265-229) we find him inscribing his famous edicts upon the huge granite boulders at the entrance of the pass that leads from Junâgâdhî to Girnâr. If the reading in Strabo of Saraostos is really, as there is good reason to suppose, a corruption of some form of Saurâshtra, then it was included in the conquests of the Indo-Skythian kings, Demetrios the son of Euthydemos (B.C. cir. 190), and Menander (B.C. 144), who, he says, pushed their conquests eastwards and "got possession not only of Patalênc, but of the kingdoms of Saraostos and Sigerdis (or Sigertis) being the remainder of the coast."

Its shores were well known to the Alexandrian merchants of the first and second centuries, but there is considerable difficulty in identifying the places they mention. Dr. Vincent,† Lassen,‡ and Col. Yule§ have each attempted the task.

Lassen places the city of Surastra at Junâgâdh, and this is as probable a conjecture as perhaps any other that could be formed. Yule places it at Navi-bandar, which is very doubtful. If not Junâgâdh or Vanthali, then Virâwal and Sihor are the only two other sites that seem likely.

Bardaxima is located by Yule at Purbandar, perhaps from the resemblance of the name to Baradâ; but Srînagar, in the same † Periplus of the Erythraean Sea.

‡ Map of Ancient India in his Indische Alterthums.
§ In Smith’s Ancient Atlas, pp. 22-24, and map 31.
district, is a much older place, and near it is a small village named Bar diyâ, which may possibly be a reminiscence of the Greek name.

Yule places the Barakê of Arrian at Jagator Dwârakâ; Lassen also identifies it with Dwârakâ, which he places on the coast between Purbandar and Miyânî, near Śrînagar. Mula-Dwârakâ, or the original site, was further east than this, but is variously placed near Mâdhupur, thirty-six miles north-west from Somanâth-Patān, or three miles south-west from Kōdinâr, and nineteen miles east of Somanâth. This last spot is called Mula Dwârakâ to this day.

Astakapra, or Astakampra, Yule has quite recently identified with Hastakavpra, mentioned in a Valabhi copper-plate grant, and believed to be the old name of Hathab, to the south of Goghâ; at Gopnâth, Yule would have Pâpikê promontory.

The Horatæ are doubtless the people of Soraṭh, who have an inveterate propensity to sound the letter S as an H; and the Pandæ are the Pāndava, dwelling in the north of the peninsula, in the district traditionally known as Panchâl or Deva-Panchâl, in which the chief town was Thân, possibly the same as Theophilâ, which Yule places doubtfully a little further east, about Talsâna, which, however, is situated in the sub-division of Jhâlāwāḍ known as the Nañ Kāñṭhā, and not in Panchāla.

Piram island is probably rightly identified by Yule with the Baiones Insula of the ancients; Monoglosson he identifies with Mangrol.

Among the sacred places in the province, Prabhāsa Patṭan or Somanāth in the south, and Dwāraka in the extreme west, are famous shrines of the Śaiva and Vaishnava forms of Brāhmaṇism,—the former, one of the twelve great Śaiva Mahāliṅgas of India, and the account of whose destruction by Maḥmūd of Ghaznī is so familiar to every reader of history, is also the spot where tradition says the great Yādava hero and demigod Krishṇa was slain; whilst Dwāraka is one of his most celebrated shrines, where he is fabled to have saved the sacred books. Tān, in the north, is an old site of sun-worship, and in the neighbourhood are several snake-shrines; and in the Gīris Tulasī Śyām, a noted Hindū shrine, with a hot spring. There is also the shrine called Ghelā Somanāth in Jasdan territory, which probably was the city of Somāpur said by Ferishtah to have been destroyed by Sultān Ahmad on his return to Gujarāt after warring at Junāgadh.

Among their “high places” the Jains reckon Śatrañjaya as their great tirtha or holy place, on the isolated mountain south of Pālitāṇā; Tālādhvaja, commonly known as Tālājā
INTRODUCTION.

Tekri, the isolated hill at Tálájá; Ujjayanta or Raivata, the famous Mount Girnár in Soraith; and Dhańka in Hálár. Perhaps the Lor or Lauhar hill in Bábriáwád is also intended by the Lauhitya of their sacred books. The Lónch and Kámló hills too in Und Sarveya are known to the Jains as Hastágiri and Kadamgiri respectively, and are usually visited by pilgrims to Pàlitáná.

Of the early history of the country we have but scanty notices. It was probably governed by satraps under Aśoka and the great Maurya kings. From coins that have been found pretty abundantly in different parts, it appears that for a period of about two centuries a dynasty known as the Kshatrapas, Sáhs, or Sińhas ruled,—perhaps at old Síhor, Sińhur, or Sińhápurá. Of this dynasty we learn from coins the names of some twenty-four princes, many of them with dates ranging from 72 to 250; the late Dr. Bhaú Dájí, reckoning these dates from the Saka era of A.D. 78, placed them between about A.D. 140 and 380.

Besides coins of the Kshatrapas, however, we have at least two inscriptions, unfortunately both somewhat defaced.

The first of these is on the famous rock between Júnágadh and Girnár, recording the repair of the dam there by Rája Mahá-kshatrapa Rudra Dáman in the year 72 of their era. His father’s name is obliterated, but that of his grandfather is given as Mahâkshatrapa Châshṭâna.

The second is a short one on a pillar on the bank of the lake at Jasdhân, in the north of the Kâthiâwâd division. It has been translated by the late Dr. Bhau Dâji, and yields the names of five of the Sâh kings, viz.:

1. Râja Mahâkshatrapa Bhadrâmukha Svâmî Châshṭâna;
2. Râja Kshatrapa Svâmî Jayâdâmân his son;
3. Râja Mahâkshatrapa ... Rudra Damâ, his son;
4. Râja Mahâkshatrapa Bhadrâmukha Svâmî Rudra Siñha, his son;
5. Râja Mahâkshatrapa Svâmî Rudra Sêna, his son, ruling in 127.

Coins supply the remainder of our knowledge of these princes, but fortunately the first of them is mentioned in the inscriptions on some of the caves in the Bombay Presidency: as at Kârlen, Nâsik, and Junnar.

From these materials Mr. Newton framed the subjoined Kshatrapa list of the kings, which is given, with the dates approved by Dr. Bhau Dâji, Professor Râmkrishña G. Bhândârkar, and others:

1. Nahapâna, a.d. 70.
2. The unknown king whose coin is given as figure 10 of the plate (p. 4, Jour. Bo. Br. R. As. Soc. vol. IX.).
3. (Syamo?) tika.
5. Jaya Dāmā, son of Chashtaṇa.
7. Rudra Dāmā, son of Jaya Dāmā.
9. Rudra Sāh or Sena, son of Rudra Sīṇha, a.d. 205.
10. Śrī Sāh, son of Rudra Sāh.
11. Sangha Dāmā, son of Rudra Sāh.
12. Dāmā Sāh, son of Rudra Sīṇha.
15. Vira Dāmā, son of Dāmā Sāh.
16. Īśvara Datta.
18. Dāmajata Śrī, son of Dāmā Sāh.
20. Viśva Sīṇha, son of Rudra Sāh, a.d. 278.
24. Yaśa Dāmā, son of Rudra Sāh.
25. Svâmi Rudra Sâh, son of Svâmi Satya Sâh.

From an inscription in the Baudha caves at Nâsik, it appears that the Kshatrapas were overthrown by Gautamiputra, the Andhrabhri-tya king of the Dekhañ, about A.D. 330. Anartta or Saurâshtra must have belonged to them for a short time. But the Guptas of Kanauj were then rising into power.

"The bards relate that Râma Râja, son of Vâlû Varsingji, reigned in Junâgadh and Vanthalî. . . . Râma Râja was of the Vâlâ race. It is said in Saurâshtra that, previous to the rise of the kingdom of Junâgadh-Vanthalî, Valabhînagar was the capital of Gujarât. The rise of Valabhî is thus told by the bards:—'The Guptas reigned between the Ganges and Jamunâ rivers. One of these kings sent his son Kumârapâla Gupta to conquer Saurâshtra, and he placed his viceroy Chakrapalita or Chakrapâñi, son of Parnadatta or Prîndat, one of his Amîrs, to reign as provincial governor in the city of Vâmanasthalî (the modern Vanthalî). Kumârapâla now returned to his father's kingdom. His father reigned twenty-three years after the conquest of Saurâshtra and then died, and Kumârapâla ascended the throne. Kumârapâla Gupta reigned twenty years and then died, and was succeeded by Skanda Gupta, but this king was of weak intellect. His senâpati Bhatárka, who was of the Gehlotí race, taking a strong army, came into Surāshṭra, and made his rule firm there. Two years after this Skanda Gupta died. The senāpati now assumed the title of king of Surāshṭra, and, having placed a governor at Vāmanasthali, founded the city of Valabhinagar. At this time the Gupta race were dethroned by foreign invaders."

Jour. R. As. Soc. vol. XII., 1848, p. 32.

The Junāgadh inscription represents Parna- dattra as Skanda Gupta’s viceroy; Chakrapālita as governor of a certain town, appointed to that place by his own father; and Bhaṭārka is mentioned in the Valabhī copper plates as Senāpati, while they represent Droṇa Siṅha, his second son, as having first assumed the title of king: Ind. Ant. vol. III. (1874).

The Guptas introduced an era of their own, usually regarded as commencing in A.D. 319, but possibly about A.D. 185-195. They doubtless arose to considerable power before they added Kāṭhāwāḍ to their dominions: indeed, according to tradition, the conquest of the country was only effected by Kumārapāla Gupta early in the reign of his father. This was probably between 80 and 85 of the Gupta era.

Valabhi, identified with the buried city at Valā, in the east of the peninsula, eighteen miles north-west of Bhaunagar, now became the capital of the new dynasty; and when the Gupta race were dethroned the Valabhi kings extended their sway "over Kachh, Lāṭ-deśa,* and Mālwā."

---

Bhāṭārka must have established himself at Vālabhī about 160 Gupta Saṃvats; and of the dynasty he founded we have numerous copper plates, discovered at Walā and elsewhere in the peninsula, which, in recording grants to Brāhmaṇs and Baudha ascetics, give also the genealogy of the family and important dates in their reigns. From such of these as have been translated† we gather that—

I. Bhāṭārka Senāpati was followed by four of his sons in succession.

II. Dharaśena Senāpati, eldest son of Bhaṭārka.

III. Droṇaśīṅha, Mahaṛaja, a second son of Bhaṭārka, "whose royal splendour was sanctified by the great gift, his solemn coronation performed in person by the Supreme Lord, the Lord Paramount of the whole earth."‡

IV. Dhruvasena I., a third brother, whose sister's daughter Duddā was a Baud-

* The collectorates of Surat, Bharoch, Khēḍa, and parts of Baroda territory.

dha devotee, and founded a monastery. The plate mentioning this is dated Saṃvat 216 (evidently of the Gupta era), other two bear dates 207 and 210.

V. Dharapāṭṭa, the youngest son of Bhaṭṭārka, who was succeeded by—

VI. Guhasena, his son, of whom there are copper plates dated respectively 250, 256 (or 266), and 258. The second grants four villages to “the community of the reverend Śākya monks belonging to the eighteen schools [of the Hīnayāna], who have come from various directions to the great convent of Duḍḍā, built by the venerable Duḍḍā.”

VII. Śrī Dharasena II., the son of Gehasena, of whom we have also grants, dated 272 and 277.

VIII. Śīlāditya (Dharmāditya) I., son of Dharasena, also made a grant to a Baudhā community dated G. 286.

IX. Kharagraha, his brother.

X. Śrī Dharasena III., son of Kharagraha.

XI. Dhruvasena II., younger son of Kharagraha.

XII. Śrī Dharasena (Balāditya) IV., second son of Dhruvasena, of whom there are two grants, both dated G. 326,—one to priests of the Mahāyāna school, belonging to a monastery erected by Divirapatī Skandaḥat-ta; and the other to Brāhmaṇs of Siṅhapura,—the modern Sihor. A third grant is dated S. 329.

XIII. Dhruvasena III., the son of Dérabhāṭṭa and grandson of Śilāditya I.

XIV. Kharagraha II., the brother of Dhruvasena III.

XV. Śilāditya II., son of Śilāditya, the brother of Dhruvasena III. and Kharagraha II.

XVI. Śilāditya III., his son, of whom there are two grants dated 356, and one 358.

XVII. Śilāditya IV., son of Śilāditya III., of whom a plate has been found dated S. 403.

XVIII. Śilāditya V.

XIX. Śilāditya VI.

It was either during the reign of Dhruvasena II., or of this last Śilāditya, who was surnamed Dhruvabhāṭṭa, that the Chinese Baudhā pilgrim Hiwen-Thsang visited Western India, and apparently Vālabhī itself (cir. A.D. 635-638). His account§ runs thus:—

“The kingdom of Fa-lapi is about 6,000 li (1200 miles) in circuit; the capital has a circumference of 30 li (6 miles). As to the products of the soil, nature of the climate, the manners and character of the people, they are like those of Ma-la-p’o (Mālwa). The population is very numerous, and all the families live in wealth. There are a hundred whose wealth amounts to a million. The rarest merchandize from distant countries is found here in abundance. There are a hundred convents, where nearly 6,009 devotees live, who for the most part study the doctrines of the Ching-liang-pu (school or nikāya of the Sammatiyas) which adheres to the 'lesser translation' (Hinayāna).|| We count several hundred temples of the gods; and the heretics of various sects are exceedingly numerous.

"When the Tathāgata (Buddha) lived in the world he travelled often in this region. Therefore in all the places where the Buddha rested King Aśoka raised pillars in honour of him, or constructed stūpas. We observe at intervals the monuments that mark the places where the three past Buddhas had sat, performed deeds, or preached the law.

"The kings of the present age are of Tsa-ti-li (Kshatriya) race; all are nephews of king Shi-lo-o-tie-to (Śīlädītya) of Mālavā. At present (about A.D. 636) the son of king Śīlādītya of Kie-jo-ka-she (Kanyakubja), has a son-in-law called Tu-lu-p’o-po-tu,¶ Dhruvapaṭu.* He is of a quick and passionate nature, and his intellect is weak and narrow: still he believes sincerely in 'the three precious things.'† For seven days every year he holds a great assembly at which he distributes to the multitude of recluses choice dishes, the three garments, medicine, the seven precious things, and rare objects of great value. After giving all these in alms, he buys them back at double price. He esteems virtue and honours the sages, he reverences religion and values science. The most eminent holy men of distant countries are always objects of respect with him.

|| In Chinese, Stiao-ching; Sans. Hīnayāna.
¶ En Chinois Ch’ang-juí, "constamment intelligent."
† Sans. Triratna.

"At a little distance from the city there is a great convent, built long ago by the care of the Arhat 'Oche-lo (Áchâra). It was there that the Bodhisattvas Te-hoe (Gunamatî), and Kien-hoei (Sthîramatî) fixed their abode and composed several books which are all published with praise."

"On leaving this country he went about 700 li (140 miles) to the north-west, and arrived at the kingdom of 'O-nan-t'o-pu-lo. The kingdom of ('O-nan-t'o-pu-lo) Ánanda pura has a circuit of about 2,000 li (400 miles); the circumference of the capital is a score of li (5 miles). The population is very numerous, and all the families live in wealth. There is no (native) prince. The country is dependent on Ma-la-p'o (Mâlwa), which it resembles in the products of its soil, nature of the climate, written character, and laws. There are a dozen convents, counting somewhat under a thousand devotees, who study the doctrine of the Ching-liang-pu (nikâya or school of the Sammatiyas) belonging to the lesser translation’ (Hinayāna). There are many dozen temples of the gods; heretics of different sects live intermixed.”

Such is the account of the Chinese pilgrim. The convent of 'Oche-lo, which he mentions as being in the vicinity of Valabhi, Dr. Bühler has found mentioned in a grant of Dhārasena II., as founded by Atharva, not "Āchāra," as Julien has transliterated the Chinese name.

The Anandapura here mentioned is probably the same as that referred to in the Kalpa-Sūtra of the Jainas, as one of their early centres of learning, and where that work was composed by Śrī Bhadra Bāhu Śvāmī, in the year 980 of their era, during the reign of Dhruvasena II., who had just then been deeply afflicted by the loss of his beloved son Senāgaja. M. Vivien de Saint-Martin, following Stevenson, places it outside the peninsula—at Badnagar, or Vadnagar, in northern Gujarāt, about twenty miles east-south-east from Siddhpur. From the connection in which it occurs, however, we might expect it rather to be within the peninsula; and, though the distance does not agree with Hiwen-Thisang’s, there is still a place called Anandapura, fifty miles (250 lǐ) north-west from Valabhi, which was very probably in early times the capital of a province including parts of the modern ‡ See continuation of Hiwen Thsang’s narrative in Note 1, pp. 33, 34.

INTRODUCTION.

Jhālāwād, Kāṭhiāwād, and Hālār. This gains support from the mention of Dhruvasena of Valabhi, who must have been closely connected with Anandapura to lead the writer of the Kalpa-Sūtra to refer to his family afflictions; and the accuracy of the latter is corroborated by Dr. Burns’s copper plate, stating that Śrī Dhārāsena IV. was Dhruvasena’s second son.

How the Valabhi dynasty ended we do not exactly know. We see that in the eighth century it still held Soraṭh, and even northern Gujarat. Tradition is almost unanimous in asserting that a Śilāditya was overthrown and slain by a foreign invader. Merutunga, the Jaina chronicler, gives a legendary account of its destruction. A Mārwāḍi, he says, from Pāli had settled at Valabhi and attained to great wealth. Śilāditya forcibly took the jewelled comb of this man’s daughter to give to his own daughter, which so offended the Mārwāḍi that, to be revenged, he went to ‘the Mlechcha country’ and offered the king an immense reward to destroy Valabhi. The Jaina priests had warning and took to flight, carrying their favourite idols with them, and by this Mlechcha lord Valabhi was utterly destroyed in Saṃvat 375. But this date cannot be correct, whatever be the epoch from which it is reckoned. Moreover, Śilāditya VI. may not have been the last of the dynasty, so that if Valabhi was destroyed by a foreign invader, probably by a Muhammadan invader, from or through Sindh—not earlier than 750 A.D., and possibly later. In an inscription from Baroda of Raja Karka II., dated Saka 734, or A.D. 812, it is said that under Karka I. Saurashtra had “lost its appellation of Saurajya from the ruin that had fallen upon it.” This destruction of the country may refer to forays by the same invaders in the eighth century, about the time when Vana Raja founded the Chavada kingdom of Anhilavada, in northern Gujarât.

Tradition says that on the fall of Valabhi the Vala governor of Vamanasthalih became independent. Raja Rama had no son, but his sister was married to the Raja of Nagar Thathâ, in Sindh, who was of the Samma tribe. This sister’s son was named Râ Gârio, and Râma Raja bequeathed the kingdom of Junagaadh-Vanthalih to this nephew, who was the first of the Chuḍa-samâ Râs of Junâgaḍh. This Râ Gârio, the grandson of Rai Chuḍâ, is said to have extended his dominions into Upper India, conquering Kanauj, Gwâlior, and Dohad, in Mâlwa.

There were petty kingdoms, however, established in various parts of the peninsula, as at Dhank, Deva Paṭtan, &c., of the history of which we know but little. The Chavadas and Solaṅkis of Anhilavada Paṭtan made frequent inroads against these chiefs, but do not seem to have ever permanently subjugated the western portions of the country, where the Jethvás and Chudásamas held sway, the latter till the fifteenth century, when they were reduced by Malêmud Begada in 1469-70.

The narrative of Ranchodji son of Amarji, the Diwan of Junagadh about the commencement of the present century, begins at a much later date, but cursorily notices the dynasty of the Chudásamas. It is in reality a chronicle of his own times, and will be found not devoid of interest.
TÀRIKH-I-SORATH.

Śāṅkara Jagat Pati.

The Lord of lords descriptions cannot laud;
In all attempts our weakness we confess.
Every plant whereon the zephyr of his love-once breathes must flourish, and whatever his wrath touches withers for time and eternity.
Whoever enjoys his favour attains happiness, but he abideth in misery from whom the rays of his light are turned away.
This Sovereign to all monarchs grants power,
The face of the earth is his board—
As a banquet of dainties to friends and to foes.
To diadems the meanest of men he can raise,
And Sultâns to the dust can abase;
All-powerful is he and worketh his will.

This poorest of Nâgars, Râncâdji, the son of Âmarji Diwân, humbly informs those who examine histories and peruse chronicles that, as many accounts written concerning the Shâhs of India and of Gujarât are well known, it seemed useless to repeat what has already been narrated. Accordingly, from a feeling of attachment to his native country, he-will confine his account to the states of Junāgadh and Hāllār, and the affairs of other Rājās as it has come to his knowledge from the oral statements of intelligent men, and from written information.

Description of the Sirkār of Junāgadh.

The fort of Junāgadh is called in Sanskrit Karāṇa Kubbaj; but as an account of it is given in the Prabhāśa Khanda of the Skanda Purāṇa I shall describe its present state only. The citadel, called Uparkot, is strongly built of stone, and is situated in a valley at the foot of Mount Girnar; it has eighty-four turrets, two gates, and two wāvst—one of the latter called Adi, and the other called Chadi,—built by Rāja Noūghan's slave-girls.† There is also a kuvo (or draw-well) excavated by Noūghan and named after him. The stone dug out to form the fosse around the fort served for the construction of the towers and battlements; and, in case of a siege, there is a subterranean passage leading into the fort on the east side, which might be used to convey provisions to the garrison.

There is a tradition that the Uparkot, or

---

* The Persian M.S. has here Karankonj, the Gujarāti Karāṇa Kuvira: Jirangadh is given by Major Watson, Ind. Ant. vol. III. p. 43. See Note 1, page 33.
† Wells with descents to the water by flights of steps.
‡ The Gujarāti reads, 'by a Pāsavan (slave-girl or kept mistress) of Rāja Noūghan.'
fort, was built by the Yâdava Râja Ugarasena,§ when he fled from Mathurâ in dread of Kâla Yavana Shâh of Khorâsân, and came to the Sorâth country. It is said that in Samvat 1507 (A.D. 1450) Râja Maṇḍalik repaired the fort of Uparjot.|| Afterwards, in the reign of Shâh Akbar, A’isa Khân came from Sindh to be the Subâhdâr, and built the wall of the city in Samvat 1690 (A.D. 1633) with a hundred and fourteen turrets and nine gates,—four of which § The Gujarâti translator, Maṇîshaûkara Jatashaûkara Mujamundâr, adds a note here, that ’he had learnt from Râj Magâ, the Vahivanchâs (or keeper of the genealogies) of the Chudâsamâ kings, that at Junâgâdh, on the Revatâchâl, there ruled a king Revata, who gave his daughter Revati to Baladeva, the brother of Sûrî Krishna, and bestowed this fort in kanyak, or marriage dowry, on the Yâdava Baladeva.’ This was doubtless derived from the Hariâsia. It is there said that Ânârta was the son of Sûrîyâ, and Ânartta’s son was Revâ, who ruled the country of Ânârta—a part of Sûrîshatra, ‘bounded on one side by the sea and on the other by Arûpa, with Girivara (Gînâr?) for its fortress.’ Raivata Kakudmin was the eldest of the hundred children of Revâ, and succeeded him on the throne of Kuśãstha. This prince went one day, accompanied by his daughter Revati, to the abode of Brahma, where for a little while (of the gods, but really many human ages) he assisted at a concert of Gandharvâs. On returning he found his capital occupied by the Yâdavas and named Dvâravatî. Raivata thereon gave his daughter to Balarâma and retired as a devotee to Mount Meru. (Hariâsia, ch. 10, 93, 111, 112, and 155.) As Raivata is the proper name of Gînâr, this reads as if intended to be understood as an allegory.—Ed.

|| This is shown by an inscription over the gate, now much defaced.
were kept open, and five closed. In Sārvat 1718 (A.D. 1661) the fort was renovated and improved by Mirzâ A'isa Tor Khân.

Round the city are tanks bearing the following names:—Khokhariyâ, Jhâbariâ, Pari, Setha, Vâgheśvari, Jamiyal Sâ, Kunvâra, Varâ, Vandrávana, &c.; there are also kundas, as the Brahmakund, Sarasvatikund, [Dâmâkund, Pâtâkund,] Khâsâ Kûnd, and others.

The suburbs around the city are named Khâmadrol, Harâ, Mâdanpûr, Jośipûr, Danlatpur, Tenbawâdî, Dhârâgar; there is also the place Bâra Shahid, or graves of the twelve martyrs who fell in the battle with Râja Jayasîñâ in the year S. 1395 (A.D. 1338). There are also gardens, such as the Bašâratbâgh, Sîrdârbâgh, the Bahâdurbâgh, and others, which are always fresh, blooming, and noted for their excellent fruits, as rayânas,* custard-apples, guavas, and especially mangoes.

The Nâgar Brâhmaṇs,—who commit to memory the glorious Veda, study religious books, and, if so minded, are able by a single glance of protection to preserve others from destructive calamities,—in consequence of the vicissitudes of the times, the attacks of the Musalmân and the Dekhani armies, are themselves now fallen from their former rank of zamindârs of

---

* Mimusops hexandria,—Roxb.

† This was Jayasîñâ Chûdâsamâ, who ruled from A.D. 1333 till 1345.
Mount Girnar.

Vadanagar, Visalnagar, Tharad, Sathodar, &c. to that of beggars. These, as well as the Brahmakhatris, who were as skilled with the sword as they themselves with the pen, were brought hither by the Ranas of Junagadh. Both these castes enjoyed special privileges secured by parwannas, and by a stone inscription set up in the middle of the bazar, exempting them from paying various taxes. These rights are still continued, [but the stone inscription is not now to be seen].

In this country have been settled from time immemorial—Girnara Brahmans, Ahers, Khants, Kolis, Parmar Rajputs, Vaghelas, Vaja Rajputs, Chudasam Rajputs, Sarasvati and Sorahta Brahmans, as well as the Surthi people. There are also Lohanas and Bhatiyas, whom king Noihan brought from Sindh. The governors and Naibs of the Ahmadabad and Dihli Sultans maintained Sayyids, Baluchis, Lodis, and Afghans in various offices, paying them salaries and pensions; but the cultivating classes immigrated from Gujarat.

Mount Girnar lies to the east of the city: it vies with the sky in height, and its huge mass causes the earth to tremble under it:—

Its pinnacles touch heaven's lofty face,
Its rocks the earth's foundation form
Ever in bloom are the bushes that wave on its sides,
With fruits its trees are laden heavily.
The top of the mountain is adorned by the temple of Śri Girnārī Nāth, which is visited by Hindus from all quarters. There are abundant springs of water, many fruits, and various and useful vegetables, as well as countless medicinal plants. The springs of Gaumakh and Kamandala vie with Kawther, and Bhimākuṇḍ Sākara-kuvo, and Hāthipaglā with the Salsabil of Paradise in sweetness.

The three temples opposite the fort or Deva-kot were erected by two Bāniā brothers, Vastupāl and Tejaḥpāl. Tradition runs that a widow, on paying a visit to her guru, was told that she would give birth to two famous sons; but a person present objected that as she was a widow she could have no offspring. A camel-driver, however, who was sleeping near, happening to overhear the conversation, immediately got up, seated the woman on his camel, and took her to his home, where in due course of time she was delivered of two infants, one of whom was named Vastupāl, and the other Tejaḥpāl, who built these temples in Saṃvat 1288† (A.D. 1231).

The large temple near the Bhimākuṇḍ was built in Saṃvat 1519 (A.D. 1462), and consecrated on 15th Kārtik by Rāja Satarath. The fort and the chambers were built of black stone by Rāo Khengār of Junāgaḍh. He built also an idol-house with eighty-four dukhâns (small rooms) for pilgrims; and, though it cannot be called a house of God, no one is outside God's house.

† One copy has S. 1277, i.e. A.D. 1221; both dates occur in the inscriptions on the triple temple built by the brothers. See Report on the Antiquities of Kāhidwād and Kachh, p. 169.

It is said that five thousand years ago, when Neminâṭh † of the Yâdu tribe heard the cries of the sheep, pigs, and buffaloes that had been collected for a banquet, he imagined they were calling for justice, and accordingly he set them at liberty, but himself retired from this wicked world to Mount Girnâr, where he became an ascetic, on the spot where a temple was afterwards built in Saṁvat 1333 (A.D. 1277), during the reign of Râja Maṇḍalik.

From Junâgâdh to the Chillah of Datâtri on the mountain, which pilgrims call Guru Datâtri, and the Musalmâns the shrine of Shâh Madâr, the Jogis the footprint of Gorakhnâth, the Śrâvaks the seat of Neminâth, and others that of Pârâvanâth, a road was constructed in Saṁvat 1882§ (A.D. 1826) by a merchant of Diva (Diu) bandar named Sanghaji. From the gate of the fort to the mandap of Śrî Girnâr Mâtâ there are 796 stone steps, and from Gaumukh to Hanumândvârâ there are 968.

To the south of Girnâr is the Chillah of Jamiyal Shâh, which is visited by pilgrims from great distances, who profess to derive great benefits from their visit. The Sūrajkūṇḍ to the north, the cell of Kālikā, the Oghăd Pāduka, and the Maddhi Bhārathi on the east side, are noted for their miracles, and at each devotees sit like lions intent on hunting the gazelle of salvation.

† See note 2 at page 47.
§ The MSS. read 1682 and 1683, but the road was under construction when Col. Tod visited Junâgâdh in 1822.

At the foot of the mountain on the west side, which may be compared to the approach to the throne for the constant worship of God, is the temple of Šrī Bhavanāth, Paitheśvar, or Mahādeva, which is visited twice a year by bands of Atits and pilgrims, who walk round it, and bring to the fair, as articles of trade, arms, shawls, jewels, and other goods.

There are various rest-houses for travellers along the ascent to the mountain, which are named Pānchapatrāda, Chodiya Parab, Kāli Parab, Dholi Parab, Māli Parab, Suvāvdī Parab, so called because a female pilgrim was there delivered of a son, the name signifying “the Rest-house of good delivery.”

To the west of Gīrnār are also situated the temples of Šrī Vāgeśvarī Mātā and Dāmodar Rāya, with the Vageśvari Kūṇḍ and Dāmodar Kūṇḍ. In the latter the bones of corpses melt. The Reratī Kūṇḍ is always full of water, and from the sands of the Suvarṇarekhā gold was washed in ancient times.* It flows from the mountain, and it is also the common belief that

* This belief probably arose from the reddish-yellow grains of mica with which the soil abounds.
there exists on the mountain a spring concealed from human eyes, called Raskup, which possesses the property of changing everything into gold, and the following legend is told of it:—
Not very many years ago, a Brâhmaṇ having lost his way, and being thirsty, tied his gourd to a rope when he arrived at this spring, intending to draw water, when all at once he heard the words "Bhar Raṅkâni nāmin," i.e. "Fill in the name of Raṅkâ." In spite of astonishment he quenched his thirst, again filled the gourd, went to the town, and, suspending it on a nail in the house of a blacksmith, an old acquaintance of his, who lived on the public way, he went off on some business. It happened that a few drops of the water fell on the anvil and hammer, which were beneath the gourd, and changed them into pure gold; whereupon the blacksmith made good use of so splendid an opportunity of bounty from the invisible world, by transmuting into gold every piece of iron he had in the shop. In this way he became as rich as Qârûn.¶
When the Brâhmaṇ returned he perceived that his gourd was empty, but the house full of gold; and on asking the blacksmith for his name the reply was Raṅkâ. Accordingly he said, "Your deposit you have received."

_Hemistich_ :—What is your fate will overtake you, sure!

¶ The Gujarâtî has Kubera, the god of wealth.
It is said that the blacksmith gave a nugget of gold to the Brâhmaṇ; but God knows best.

In the fort there are two large cannon, taken with other spoils from the Portuguese of Diu; they were cast in Egypt A.H. 937; one of them is eleven, and the other nine cubits long.

On the top of the mountain the following localities also are remarkable:—Hanumândvârâ, the Pâduka of Râmânand, Bhairavajap, Borâdevî, Jata-Śaṅkara-Mahâdeva, Jadeśvara, Siddhakarani Mâtâ, Muchhakanda Râjrâjeśvara Mahâdeva, and many others not necessary to mention.

During the lapse of time, the fort of Uparkat was deserted, but was taken possession of in Sâmvat 1804 (A.D. 1747) by Mânsîâ Khât, who became the source of much trouble. Afterwards it was made a choki, but was on several occasions occupied by Arabs, whom the Navâb Sâheb succeeded in expelling.

The length of this Subâh, from the port of Ghoghâ to Arâmrâ, is one hundred and two kos; and its breadth, from the port of Diva to Sârdhârâ, is seventy-two kos. Some say that the government of the Châudâsâmâ Râjpâuts extended as far as the town of Bûrad, situated on the banks of the Sâbarmatî near Khambayat, and that it was called the government of Soraṭh.

In this Sirkâr there are 500 mîlguzârî villages (with 37,200 houses and 120,060 men), paying chauth, which are well established, and the neighbourhood of the fortress is also populous. The forts of Majewadi and Kadiâ are flanked by four towers. The revenue, including Bântwa, amounts to eight lâkhs of rupees. In most of the mahâls the revenue was assessed by a rough guess (made by inspecting the standing crops), which system is in Hindi called dâhâl; but in a few mahâls the Government share of the produce is taken in the grain-yard. Berô [vero, land-tax] is levied on every plough. Sipâhis and Sayyids and Nâgars pay no zakât [customs dues]. The current kori Nâgher Pargaṇâ is the Chândshâhi or Pâdshâhi and the Divi rupee. The Pargaṇâs are Sâlem, Banthali, Kutíanâ, Bhaḍ Mîrî, Aliah, Biârej, Chorvâḍ, Bandar Verâval, Patan Div, Sutrapâḍa, Kodiânâ, Una, Delwâdâ, and collective Pargaṇâs:—Man-grôl, Jetpur, Bandar Jhânâpoli, Rânpur, Bagas-râ, Bilkhâ, Sil Bandar, Verâval, and Amreli.

Note 1 at page 24.

[Junâgadh, ‘the old fort,’†—anciently *Girinagar,—*is a place of great antiquity and historical interest. We find it visited in the seventh century by the indefatigable Chinese Buddhist traveller Hiwen Thsang;‡ whose journal runs thus:—

---

* A rupee is equal to 3½ koris.
† Not Yâvanagarâ, as erroneously supposed by Lassen.
‡ Vide ante, pp. 16-19.
“Leaving the kingdom of Valabhi (near Bhaunagar), Hiuen Thsang went about 100 miles to the west, and reached the kingdom of Su-la-ch’a (Saurashtra). This realm is nearly 800 miles in circuit. The capital has a circumference of six miles, and upon the west side (the country) touches the river Mo-hi (Mahi). Its inhabitants are very numerous, and all the families are wealthy. The country is subject to the kingdom of Valabhi. The soil is impregnated with salt, and its flowers and fruits are few. Though heat and cold are equally distributed over the year, storms of wind never cease. Indifference and coldness characterize the manners; the people are superficial, and do not care to cultivate learning (nor the arts). Some follow the true doctrine, and others are given to heresy. There are some fifty convents, where they count about three thousand recluses (the most part of the school Shang-tso-pu), who study the doctrines of the (Arya) Sthavira sect, which holds by the ‘greater translation’ (Mahayana). There are a hundred temples of the gods (Devalayas), and the heretics of different sects live together. As this realm is on the way to the Western Sea, all the inhabitants profit by the advantages the sea affords, and give themselves to trade and barter.”

“At a short distance from the (capital) city rises Mount Yeu-shen-ta (Ujjanta§) upon the top of which a monastery is established. The chambers and galleries have been mostly hollowed out in the face of a scarped peak. The mountain is covered with thick forests, and streams from the springs surround it on all sides.|| There holy men and sages walk and fix their abode, and thither resort crowds of Rishis endowed with divine faculties."

§ Ujjayanta, one of the names of Raivata or Girnar.

Of the Buddhist convents he speaks of there are still evidences. On the Uparkot there is a very large half-ruined masjid, near which a curious excavation was discovered about ten years ago and opened up. It consists of a hall and a neat tank or bath, with a second story or galleries above. The hall has six principal pillars with very elaborate capitals ornamented with groups of human figures, mostly females. And again, outside the Uparkot, both to the north and south, in the sandstone of which it is formed, there are numerous excavations of great age; whilst, at a short distance, the masjid at Mahi Ghadechi is built above a Buddhist cave-temple having still two pillars and two pilasters in front, with lions rampant as brackets outside the scarcely formed capitals. There are also numbers of Baudhā caves near Bāwā Pyārā's Math.

But about half a mile to the westward of the town, at the entrance of the dell or valley leading in between two of the hills that girdle the mighty and sacred Girnār, is the antiquity of Junagadh—the rock inscribed with the edicts of Aśoka Skandagupta and Rudra Dāma. This remarkable lapidary monument of antiquity seems to have been first described by Colonel Tod, who saw it in 1832, and remarked the similarity of the characters

|| Or—"and one hears the murmur of gushing fountains."
upon it to those of the Dilhī Lāṭ and the Buddhist caves; but his Travels were not published till 1839, and it was the Rev. Dr. J. Wilson who first obtained a transcript of it, a copy of which was forwarded to Mr. James Prinsep, of Calcutta, early in 1837, who translated it.

Those inscriptions contain fourteen paragraphs, tablets, or 'edicts' of Aśoka, the great Buddhist emperor of India, who ruled about 262 to 226 B.C., and who constantly styles himself "Rāja Priyadarśi."

They have since been retranslated and commented on by Professors H. H. Wilson, E. Burnouf, C. Lassen, and Dr. H. Kern. The following are the best translations now available. Those who wish to see full transcripts, &c. must consult the Antiquities of Kāshīvālī and Kākhī (pp. 95 to 127), or Indian Antiquary (vol. V. pp. 257-276).

Translations of the Aśoka Edicts.

I. "This is the edict of the beloved of the gods, the Rāja Priyadāsi. The putting to death of animals is to be entirely discontinued, and no convivial meeting is to be held: for the beloved of the gods, Rāja Priyadāsi, remarks many faults in such assemblies. There is but one assembly, indeed, which is approved of by the Rāja Priyadāsi, the beloved of the gods, which is that of the great kitchen of Rāja Priyadāsi; every day hundreds of thousands of animals have been slaughtered for virtuous purposes; but now, although this pious edict is proclaimed, that animals may be killed for good purposes, and such is the practice, yet, as the practice is not determined, these presents are proclaimed, that hereafter they shall not be killed."¶

II. "In the whole dominion of king DevānampriyaPriyadarśin, as also in the adjacent countries, as Chola, Pāṇḍya, Satyaputra, Kerala, as far as Tamraparni, the kingdom of Antiochus the Grecian king, and of his neighbour kings, the system of caring for the sick, both of men and cattle, followed by King Devānampriya Priyadarśin, has been everywhere brought into practice; and at all places where useful healing herbs for men and cattle were wanting he has caused them to be brought and planted; and at all places where roots and fruits were wanting he has caused them to be brought and planted; also he has caused wells to be dug and trees to be planted on the roads, for the benefit of men and cattle."*

III. "King Priyadasī says: This was ordained by me when I had been twelve years inaugurated in the conquered country—that among those united in the law, whether strangers or my own subjects, quinquennial expiation shall be held for the enforcement of moral obligations, as duty to parents, friends, children, relations, Brāhmans, and Śramanās. Liberality is good; non-injury of living creatures is good; and abstinence from prodigality and slander is good. The Assembly itself will instruct the faithful in the virtues here

¶ The above is Wilson's—Jour. R. As. Soc. vol. XII. p. 164. The translation of this edict has not been revised by either Burnouf or Kern.

* Kern, ut sup. p. 91.
enumerated, both by explanation and by example.”†

IV. “In past times, during many centuries, attacking animal life and inflicting suffering on the creatures, want of respect for Brāhmans and Śramanas, have only grown greater. But now, when King Devānāmpriyā Priyadarśin practises righteousness, his kettledrum has become a summons to righteousness: while apparitions of chariots of the gods, and apparitions of celestial elephants, and fiery balls, and other signs in the heavens showed themselves to the people. In such a manner as has not been the case in many centuries previously, now, through the exhortation of King Devānāmpriyā Priyadarśin to cultivate righteousness, has the sparing of animal life, the gentle treatment of creatures, respect for relatives, respect for Brāhmans and monks, obedience to father and mother, obedience to an elder, grown greater. This and many other kinds of virtuous practices have grown greater, and King Devānāmpriyā Priyadarśin shall cause this practice of virtue to increase still more, and the sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons of King Devānāmpriyā Priyadarśin shall also cause this culture of virtue to increase; standing steadfast in righteousness and morality until the destruction of the world, they shall exhort to righteousness; to exhort to righteousness is surely a very excellent work, while from him who is immoral no practice of righteousness is to be expected. Increase, therefore, in these things, and no diminution, is good; for this end has this been written; may they attend heartily to the increase hereof, and not aim at the diminution of it! King Devānāmpriyapaṇya Prīyadarśin has caused this to be written twelve years after his inauguration.”‡

† This is Wilson’s translation of this tablet, proposed subject to considerable doubt.” M. Burnouf observes that this last sentence is mere literally—“‘D’après la cause et d’après la lettre; à peu près comme quand on dit, au fond et dans la forme.”

V. “The beloved of the gods, King Prīyadaśi, thus proclaims: Virtue is difficult of performance, therefore much good is to be done by me, and my sons and grandsons, and other my posterity (will) conform to it for every age. So they who shall imitate them shall enjoy happiness, and those who cause the path to be abandoned shall suffer misfortune. Vice is easily committed; therefore Dharma Mahāmatra (or great officers of morals) are appointed by me, in the thirteenth year of my inauguration, for the purpose of presiding over morals among persons of all the religions, for the sake of the increase of virtue, and for the happiness of the virtuous, among the people of Kamboja, Gandhara, Rāṣṭrika, and Pitenika. They shall also be spread among the warriors, the Brāhmaṇs, the mendicants, the destitute, and others, without any obstruction, for the happiness of the well-disposed, in order to loosen the bonds of those who are bound, and liberate those who are confined, through the means of holy wisdom disseminated by pious teachers; and they will proceed to

‡ This and the VIth are from Dr. Kern’s version.
the outer cities and fortresses of my brother and sister, and wherever are any other of my kindred; and the ministers of morals, those who are appointed as superintendents of morals, shall, wherever the moral law is established, give encouragement to the charitable and those addicted to virtue. With this intent their edict is written, and let my people obey it." §

VI. "King Devanampriya Priyadarśin saith: In past times there has never yet existed care for the (civil) interests, nor official superintendence; therefore have I instituted the same; all the time that I have been reigning there have been everywhere inspectors over the women, sanctuaries, travelling pilgrims(?), traders (or trade-markets), and parks for walking, in order to attend to the interests of my people; and in all respects I further the interests of my people; and whatever I declare, or whatever the Mahāmatra shall declare, shall be referred to the council for decision. Thus shall reports be made to me. This have I everywhere, and in every place, commanded, for to me there is not satisfaction in the pursuit of worldly affairs; the most worthy pursuit is the prosperity of the whole world. My whole endeavour is to be blameless towards all creatures, to make them happy here below, and enable them thereafter.

§ This has not been revised by Dr. Kern. The above is Professor Wilson's version, slightly modified by later commentators.

|| The Dhauli redaction reads: "All the time that I have been reigning, the inspectors over, &c. have had to communicate to me the interests of the people."

¶ Thus far Kern's version, ut sup. pp. 75, 76.
to attain Svarga. With this view this moral edict has been written: may it long endure, and may my sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons after me also labour for the universal good! but this is difficult without extreme exertion.” *

VII. “Priyadasī, the king dear to the gods, desires that everywhere the ascetics of all persuasions should remain [in peace]; they all desire the regulation that they exercise upon themselves, and purity of the soul; but people have different opinions and different likings, [and] the ascetics obtain, whether the whole, or whether a part only [of what they ask]. Nevertheless, for himself, to whom there reaches not a large alms, the empire over himself, purity of mind, knowledge, and firm devotion which lasts for ever, this is good.” †

VIII. “In past times the kings went out on journeys of pleasure; stag-hunting and other such-like recreations were in vogue. But king Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin, ten years after his inauguration, came to the true insight. Therefore he began a walk of righteousness, which consists in this, that he sees at his house and bestows gifts upon Brāhmaṇs and monks, he sees at his house and presents elders with gold, he receives subjects of town and country, exhorts to righteousness and seeks righteousness. Since then, this is the greatest pleasure of king De-

* Lassen, Ind. Alt. vol. II. p. 263, note 1, Burnouf (Lotus de la Bonne Loi, p. 654) translates the last sentence, “mais cela est difficile à faire si ce n’est par un héroïsme supérieur.”

† From Burnouf’s version.
vānāṃpṛīya Priyadarśin in the period after his conversion.”

IX. “King Devānāṃpṛīya Priyadarśin speaks thus: It is a fact that men do all kinds of things which are thought to assure luck, as well in sicknesses as at betrothals and marriages, at the getting of children, or at going from home. On these and other occasions men do all kinds of things which are thought to bring prosperity. But he is a great fool who does all those manifold, multifarious, vain, and useless things. This, however, does not indeed remove the necessity of a man’s doing something which will bring prosperity, but such a kind as has been named is of little use, while of great use is true piety. To that belongs proper treatment of servants and subordinates, sincere reverence for elders and masters, sincere self-restraint towards living beings, sincere charity to Brāhmans and monks. These and other such-like actions—that is called true piety. Every man must hold that forth to others, whether he is a father or a son, a brother, a lord; this is noble; this must a man do, as something that assures luck, until his aim has been fully attained. Mention was made just now of ‘sincere charity.’ Now there is no charity, no affection to be compared to charity or affection springing from true piety. It is just this which a well-meaning friend, relative, or companion must, at every occurring opportunity, impress on another, that this is duty, this is proper. By doing all this a man can merit heaven; therefore let him who wishes to gain heaven for himself fulfil, above all things, these his duties.”

† This and the next four are from Dr. Kern’s versions.

X. “King Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin does not deem that renown and great name bring advantage greatly, if, at the same time, his people, for the present and afterwards, were not practising right obedience, and following exhortation to virtue. In so far only king Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin desires renown and great name. All, therefore, that King Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin strenuously strives after is for the life hereafter, so that he may be wholly and altogether free from blemish. Now blemish is the same as sinfulness. But such a thing is, indeed, difficult for anyone whatever, be he a person of low degree or of high station, unless with the utmost exertion of power, by sacrificing everything. But this is, indeed, most difficult for a person of high station.”

XI. “King Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin speaks thus: There is no charity which equals right charity, or right conversation, or right liberality, or right relation. Under that is comprehended proper treatment of servants and subordinates, sincere obedience to father and mother, sincere charity towards friends and acquaintances, Brāhmans and monks, the sparing of animal life. This is to be commended as good, whether by father or by sons, by brothers, by friends, acquaintances, and relatives, nay, even by neighbours: thus it is good; thus must men act. He who acts thus makes this world a friend to him, and hereafter a man obtains for himself an imperishable reward through all that true charity.”
XII. "King Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin honours all sects, and orders of monks, and conditions of heads of families, and honours them with love-gifts and with marks of honour of all kinds. To be sure, Devānāmpriya does not attribute so much value to love-gifts or marks of honour as to this, that the good name and intrinsic worth of all sects may increase. Now intrinsic worth can grow greater in many ways, but the foundation thereof, in all its compass, is discretion in speaking, so that no man may praise his own sect, or contemn another sect, or despise it on unsuitable occasions; on all manner of occasions let respect be shown. Whatever of good, indeed, a man, from any motive, confers on any one of a different persuasion, tends to the advantage of his own sect and to the benefit of a different persuasion; by acting in an opposite manner a man injures his own sect and offends a different sect. Though every one who praises his own persuasion may perhaps do all that from attachment to his own sect, for the purpose of glorifying it, nevertheless he shall, by so doing, greatly injure his own persuasion. Therefore concord is best, so that all may know and willingly listen to each other's religion. Because it is the wish of Devānāmpriya that the members of all persuasions may be well instructed, and shall adhere to a doctrine of benevolence. And to them who are inclined to all that, let the assurance be given that Devānāmpriya does not attach so much value to love-gifts or show of reverence as to this, that all sects may increase in good name and intrinsic worth, and be reverenced. For this end sheriffs over legal proceedings, magistrates entrusted with the superintendence of the women, hospice-masters (?), and other bodies have been appointed. And the result of this is, that Devānampiya’s persuasion has increased in prosperity, and that he causes the Righteousness to come forth in full splendour."

XIII. " . . . . Whose equality and exertion towards that object, exceeding activity, judicious conduct . . . . . afterwards in the Kalinga provinces not to be obtained by wealth . . . . . the decline of religion, murder and death, and unrestrained license of mankind; when flourished the (precious maxims) of Devānampiya comprising the essence of learning and of science: dutiful service to mother and father; dutiful service to spiritual teachers; the love of friend and child, (charity) to kinsfolk, to servants, (to Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas, &c., which) cleanse away the calamities of generations; further also in these things unceasing perseverance is fame. There is not in either class of the heretics of men, not, so to say, a procedure marked by such grace, . . . , nor so glorious nor friendly, nor even so extremely liberal as Devānampiya’s injunction for the non-injury and content of living creatures . . . . . and the Greek king besides, by whom the kings of Egypt, Ptolemaios and Antigonus, and Magas, . . . . . Both here and in foreign (countries), everywhere the religious ordinances of Devānampiya effect conversion wherever they go; . . . . . conquest is of every description; but, further, the conquest which bringeth joy springing from pleasant emotions becometh joy itself; the victory of virtue is happiness; the victory of happiness is not to be overcome; that which essentially possesses a pledge of happiness,—such victory is desired in things of this world and things of the next world.”§

XIV. “King Devānāmpriya Priyadārāśīn has caused this righteousness-edict to be written, here concisely, there in moderate compass, in a third place again at full length, so that it is not found altogether everywhere worked out; for the kingdom is great, and what I have caused to be written, much. Repetitions occur also, in a certain measure, on account of the agreeableness of various points, in order that the people should in that way (the more willingly) receive it.

If sometimes the one or other is written incompletely or not in order, it is because care has not been taken to make a good transcript, or by the fault of the copyist (i.e. the stone-engraver).”||

In one place only, namely, the signature of the Girnār inscription, is Buddha referred to. Of this signature there remains——

... va sveto hasti savaloka sukhāhara nāmaṁ.

What is left means——

“The white elephant whose name is the bringer of happiness to the whole world.”

“That by this term Śākyā is implied,” Dr. Kern thinks, “there can be no doubt, since the legend says that the Bodhisattva, the future Buddha, left heaven to bring happiness to men, and entered his mother’s womb as a white elephant.”

§ Mr. Prinsep’s translation—Jour. R. As. Soc. vol. XII. pp. 227-233. A large part of the original of this edict has been broken off from the stone, which renders the translation very difficult.

|| Dr. Kern’s version.
NOTE 2.

Note 2 on page 29.

[Neminâtha or Arishṭanemi, who gives his name to one of the summits of Girnār, and to whom the Jainas consider the whole mount as sacred, is the twenty-second of their Tīrthâṅkaras or deified saints,—men who, through successful austerities, they imagine, have entered nirvāṇa, and have done with the evils of existence. This one is the favourite object of worship with the Digambara or naked Jainas. His complexion, they say, was black, and most, if not all, of his images here are of that colour; like all the other Tīrthâṅkaras, he was of royal descent, being the son of Samudravijaya, king of Sauryanagāra or Soriyapuri, in the country of Kuśavarta, and of the Harivānśa race—his paternal uncle being Vasudeva, the father of the famous Krīṣṇa. At the age of three hundred he renounced the world, and leaving Dvârakâ went to Girnâr to spend the remaining seven hundred years of his long life in asceticism; he received his ‘Bodhi,’ or highest knowledge, whilst meditating at Śesavāna, to the east of the Bhairava-jap, where footprints (pdglā) are also carved—some say Neminâtha’s, others Râmânanda’s. His first convert was a king Dattātri, to whom he became guru, after which he gradually rose to the exalted rank of a Tīrthâṅkara, and finally attained nirvāṇa on this lonely pinnacle of rock which retains his name. He had as tutelary goddess, or familiar devī, Ambikā Mātā, the same to whom the old temple on the first summit is dedicated. The Mango tree is also appropriated to him by the Śrāvakas as his 'Bo-tree,' whilst the śankha or conch-shell is his cognizance. He is, in fact, the Kṛishṇa of the Jainas.

¶ Kern, ut sup. p. 43.

But it is not to them alone he is sacred here; the Vāishṇavas who come from the pilgrimage to Dvārakā consider they only reap the fruit of their toils when they have paid their respects to Guru Dattātraya.]

Mahāls which pay all the Land and Customs Revenue Rights to Junagadh.

Vanthali has two stone forts, washed on different sides by the rivers Ojhat and Obin. The palace of Vāmanrāja is in the town, as well as the Sūraj Kūnd. The Tomb of Bhalla Shāh, with the Asrām of Kapilamuni, is celebrated in this kasbā. The kasbātīs, who in former times became Musalmāns, immigrated to this country from Nāghor, and occupy themselves with cultivation.

Vanthali was for a long time known by the name of Patan, but Vahudipal Dhundhulimal the Yogi, who lived in the hills of Dhank, in his wrath pronounced the curse "Patan so datan!" "Patan, be buried!" upon it; whereupon eighty-four towns bearing that name were swallowed up by the earth, and Patan shared the same fate, as may be seen even in our days, since, wherever excavations are made, foundations of buildings, and various things, are dug up. During the tenure of power of the author in this town, two stone horses, each one cubit high, were dug up, with a stone box in which they were, and also other more valuable things in Samvat 1842 (A.D. 1785).

As the rivers swell greatly during the rains, it is difficult to cross them, and there is a great deal of mud, but the soil is good, and produces excellent sugar-cane, mangoes, and great quantities of guavas; they sow three times every year.

In the Samvat year 1803 (A.D. 1746) Kahuji with the Navab Fakhr-al-daulah unsuccessfully besieged the town, but in 1835 Jabbar Khan treacherously obtained possession of the fort, which, however, was again taken from him after a siege by Divanji Amarji Saleh; but again it fell into the possession of the Jamadars Sharf-al-din and Omar for some years, and was captured in 1851 (A.D. 1794) by Madhuraya Ben Khoshkhali, to expel whom the author was called from Nagar by the Navab Saeheb Hamed Khan, and he succeeded in doing so by negotiation in 1860 (A.D. 1803). Afterwards Madhuraya with Babaji Saeheb, the Kurbhari of the Gaikvad, again besieged it, but ineffectually.

The Kasba of Kutianaa.

This place has two stone forts, and is situated on the banks of the Bhâdâr river. It is said that for a long time a Chârâni woman whose name was Kuntî used to pasture her cattle on this spot, which in course of time became a village. The governor, Kalidâs, who was a Baniâ and had built a fort for himself in the vicinity of Ahmadâbâd to which he gave his own name, constructed here also a square fort of considerable strength so as to control Purbandar and Hâllâr. During the government of the Musalmâns, Afghan Sipahis, Malikâs, Khokhârs, Jundrâns, &c., settled here, and gradually became so strong as to be independent, and appointed Nia'amat Khân Lodi as their governor; but afterwards, growing dissatisfied, they surrendered the fort to Rânâ Sultânji, from whom they likewise revolted, and gave it to Hâshem [Hasan] Khân, the adopted son of Navâb Bahâdur Khân, from whom it was taken by Amarji, the father of the author. In Saumvat 1840 [A.D. 1783] the Divân Govindji rebelled, and the Navâb Sâheb, having besieged the fort for a month, afterwards made peace. In the year 1858 [A.D. 1801] Kaliyândâs Hirji, a Baniâ, revolted from the Navâb Sâheb, but after a month's contest the author took the fort from him.

The Khâga sâri fort, which was formerly at the head of the Parganâ, with twenty-four villages, was given to Maluk Muhammed Sindhi as a jâghir, for his services as Qâzi, of which also the fort of Devara is an appanage from the time of the Divân Sâheb Amarji.

The temples of Vageśvarī Mātā and Amarsevara were built by Dalpatrām, the younger brother of the author. The place of pilgrimage (mezār) of Chaman Jellāl is the ornament of this town at a distance of about three kos from which also'
are Gokarṇatīrtha and Mahādeva’s Śivalaya.
Most of the villages are joint property with Purbbandar and Māngarol.

Bântwā.

Bântwā has a strong fort, and the village of Mānār belongs to it; most of it at present belongs to Purbbandar and Māngrol, and is inhabited by the Mehmans. Nawâb Sohrâb Khân, Governor of Khabbâyat, waged war against Sher Zamân Khân and Diler Khan Bābi, compelling them to evacuate Ghoghâ;
but they obtained eighty [p. 84] villages as a jâgir from the Nawâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân in 1779 [†1789], A.D. 1722.

The Kasbā of Mângrol.

The port of Mângrol has two strong forts on the sea-shore with ditches, and is the residence of a governor or Hâkam. After annexing to Bântwā eighty villages, two hundred and eighty-one still belong to Mângrol.

In ancient times Rânâ Bâhân, Râja of Gâumlî,§

§ See note at p. 58.
forsome reason divorced his wife, and being desirous again to recall her he consulted learned men on the subject. They said that a dismissed wife might again be taken back if eighteen hundred virgins were given by him in marriage, he defraying the bridal expenses. Accordingly the Rânâ built a bridal hall or chauri, of squared stone, in S. 1264, and gave these virgins in marriage, and this edifice existed for many years till the arrival of Shams Khân, the Nâib of the Sulân Firoz Shah, who converted it into a Jamâ'a mosque, and left Sikandar Khân as Thânâdâr, in SâÌuvat 1350 (A.D. 1293). In this place Makhdûm Jehaniah with other saints are buried, and at the tomb the spears of A'fi, the garment of the prophet, and a goblet brought from the fourth heaven are shown to pilgrims.

In former times the zamindârs of these places were Râjpûts of the Vâghelâ tribe, but gradually various others obtained lands, e.g. Qâzis, Malikas, Sayyids, &c., and who, becoming powerful, expelled the Vâghelâs. These persons usually obeyed the governors of Junâgaâdh or Gujarât.

Under the government of Srimant Peshvâ Bâji Râo, his Nâib Natâji distressed the Rayâs so much that many of them emigrated to Ju-nâgaâdh and other parts of the country. Natâji also gave much trouble to the Musalmâns and Jats on account of the Ekâdaâsi [11th of the Hindu month] fasting, and on account of the Mangrol.

Mondays, and the people in general were much dissatisfied with him; accordingly Shekh Miân, son of Qâzi Fakhr-ud-din, expelled Jâdav Jaswant, the Thanadâr of the Šrimant Peshwâ, by the edge of the sword, in the year Saṁvat 1805 [A.D. 1748], and taking the government into his own hands, levied tribute from Kesod, Chorvâd, Kodinâr, Pâtan, Purbandar, &c.; sometimes also he made raids into Kâthiâvâd, and carried away whatever property or cattle he could, from which he used to pay the wages of his Sipahis; the Desâgiri allowance of these places, however, still belongs to the Nâgars, Banâs, and Khâtris.

Prosperity increased during the rule of Shekh Badr-ud-din bin Nur-ud-din bin Shekh Miân, son of the Qâzi. He also kept up the dignity of his position by waging a successful war against Purbandar and Chorvâd; he died, however, on the 8th Vaisâkh Śuddh of the Saṁvat year 1871 (A.D. 1814), and was succeeded by his son Abâ Miân.

The grandfather of the author was a god-worshipping man adorned with every good quality; his name was Kuñwarji bin Prâgji bin Gopâlji bin Vekunṭh bin Śripat bin Śivâji, and he was the hereditary agent of the Chief, and possessed several pieces of land in this Kasbâ, partly irrigated from wells and partly by the rains, the produce whereof constituted his support. He worshipped the Liṅga of the lord Śrī Buḍhābāvā, which was a gift from the Sultān Farukhāsiyar Shāh of Dihli, and with reference to it the following legend is current:

|| The original has khirâj, properly land-tax, but here used, as it often is, for tribute.—J. W. W.

It is related that one day when the Sultān Akbar was walking on the banks of the Jamunā he perceived two women going home from the river with full waterpots on their heads, when all of a sudden a mouse carried by a kite flying above them fell down; and one of the damsels immediately exclaimed disparagingly to her companion, "Just see what times of weakness have set in, when a kite is unable to carry such a little mouse! Four thousand eight hundred years ago, when the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas were waging a great war against each other, I was a kite, and flew away with the arm of Rāja Jydrāt, the Shāh of Sindhu, which had two armlets on it." The Sultān happened to overhear these words; accordingly he stopped; and to his inquiries the woman replied without further ceremony as follows:—

"I had been created a kite, and having, after picking it up from the ground with my beak, flown away with the arm of Rāja Jydrat, which the arrow of Sātaki [Bhuri Śrava, a descendant of the Svātaki Yādavas] had severed from his shoulder, I sat down on the top of a tree. After I had consumed all the flesh, I dropped the bones, together with the gold, into the well beneath the tree; and I dare say that if the heap of dirt which has accumulated on the spot during the lapse of ages were to be removed, the truth of my statement would be confirmed by the discovery of the bones and armlets." The Shâh despatched servants, who dug up the spot, and brought from the depth of the well two Śiva-liṅgas which were set in the gold armlets just mentioned. It is related that the arm-bone of that râja was eight spans long. The two Śiva-liṅgas were kept in the Shâh's private apartments, and were day and night placed in contact with fragrant substances, such as attar and water of roses, sandal, saffron, and aloes; camphor-lights, food, beverages, garments, and jewels were placed before them, and he secretly worshipped them, away from the eyes of weak-minded critics, as the Musalmâns had already become accustomed to accuse his majesty of idolatry and irreligiousness because he was in the habit of saying—

(Distich)—

"In idol forms I worship God, Not idols separate from God."

This custom was kept up till the time of 'Azim Shâh; but afterwards when the turn of the Shâhzhâdâh Farukhsiyar came and he began to reign, he presented his Vazîr, the Râja Chabilârâm Bahâdur, who conquered the Dekhan and was a Nâgar, as a reward for his services, with the two Śiva-liṅgas, a dress of honour, and a Rudrākṣa rosary the beads of which were made of pearls. On this occasion he said with his own blessed tongue, “O Rāja Bahādur! This is Būdhābāvā” (i.e. “old father,” which is a metaphor for Eternal Creator), “worship it!” When he took the Liṅgas home, he gave one of them, which was of emerald colour, to Dāyarām, who was a highly respected Nāgar and a jāgirdār in the pargana of Nāginā pūrand district of Mēvāt. Some time afterwards the conquests of the Dekhanis, the dissensions of the Amirs, and the invasions of the Persian armies disturbed the comfort of the jāgirdārs and royal servants, so that Dāyarām established himself at Bānāras, where he became so intimate with the grandfather of the author that he betrothed to him his own daughter, and after a while, when they returned to Māngrol, the wedding was consummated there; on that occasion he presented his daughter also with the Śri Būdhābāvā as a portion of her dowry, which is the source of endless blessings and of divine favours. Then becoming a sanyāsi he went to Nāsik, and finally to Bānāras, where he died, whilst the Mehtā kept and continued to worship the Śiva-liṅga. Lastly, Sultān Zufar Khān and Tātār Khān came with troops from Māngrol, altered the Sūraj temple and called it the Rāvali mosque; they also spoilt the Rāvali Wāv. About two hundred years ago [1510], on the staircase of the Gomati Wāv, the image of Ranchoḍ Rāya was found by Parbat Mehtā, and is to this day worshipped in a Vaishṇava temple of Junāgaḍh.

Here are places of pilgrimage, such as that of Mērān Shāh and others, and, at a distance of three kos, the temple of Kāmnātha or Kāmeśvara. In the town itself may be seen the temples of Kāśī Viśvanāth, Hātkēśvarā, Siddhēśvara, Nilakantha, Mātā Hinglāj, Mangalāj, Appachhādevi, Navadurgā, Saptamātri, Ranchoḍ Rāya, and Raghunātha Rāya.

In this zillā there is much garden cultivation, and fine water-melons and vāls [olīyas] are produced. Here the Nāgars are Jāgirdārs, Kārkhāris, Kanūntūs, Desāyas, and they follow all the occupations in which penmanship is required; they were invited by the rājas and governors from all sides, and employed in civilizing the country.

Merchandise from Arabia, the Koṅkaṇa, from Sindh, and from the coasts arrives in the port of Māngrol, and is the occasion of much trade. On a certain occasion some Bokhāri Sayyids entered the town in carts in the disguise of a marriage procession, and treacherously took possession of Māngrol, and fourteen wives of the Ḥākim of this place preferred being consumed by fire in the tower of Sakotri to losing their honour.

The pargānā of Māngrol is the joint property of the Navāb of Junāgaḍh and of the Rāja of Mângrol. It contains the following forts with four towers, viz. Mahiâri, Bagasrâ, Šil, Diwâsa, Sepa (?), Meswana (?), Lâthodrâ, and Shergâdh. Some of the lands are under cultivation, and others are neglected.

Note 3 on Ghumlî or Bhumli, page 51.

[In the south of the Nâvânâgâra territory, and about forty miles west from Dânk, is Ghumli, an old deserted capital of the Jêtwâs—now of Pûrbandar. It lies about four miles south of Bhanvâd, in the last valley facing the north, in the north-eastern end of the Bâra Ji hills, and concealed from the north by a low ridge, which bends round in front of the opening to the valley or dell, shutting up the town in a sort of cul-de-sac, open only through the narrow valley to the north-west, by which it is approached from the modern village of Mukhâna. Up both sides of the dell its ruined walls wind in various directions along the shelving ridges which overlook it, up to the summit of the mountain, where was a fortified citadel, still containing the walls of many of the houses in a tolerable state of preservation, but entirely deserted except by wild beasts. The very vertex is occupied by a small temple of Mâtâ Aşâpurî—a favourite object of superstitious reverence with the Jetwâs Rajputs.

According to the traditions of the province, the earliest seat of the Jetwâs was at Srinâgâra, a few miles from their present one of Pûrbandar. Soon afterwards it was at Bhimor or Mordvâjpurî, now a ruined site opposite to Morvî.
and six generations later—probably early in the tenth century—Ghumli or Bhumili was made the capital, and adorned with imposing buildings by Raja Sali Kumara; but in Sambvat 1369 (A.D. 1313) it fell, after a desperate siege, by an army from Sindh. From Ghumli the Jatwâ chief then removed to Chaya, near Purbandar,—the latter being its port, which has since supplanted Chaya.

This ruined and deserted capital was visited by the indefatigable Colonel Tod in 1822, and described by him in his Travels in his usual glowing and exaggerated style. In 1837 Captain (now General Sir G.) Le Grand Jacob gave an account of a visit to it with much more accuracy and detail.*

"All is now jungle," says the latter, "where once multitudes of human beings resided; within and without the ruined ramparts so thick is it as to make it difficult to trace them even from a height. The ground-plan of Ghumli resembles a widespread fan, the two sides of which are formed by the gorge of the valley, leading up to the peak on which the fort is built, the circular portion being represented by the ramparts."

"The extreme breadth from the eastern to the western wall," he adds, "is about three-quarters of a mile; its length from the north wall to the narrow of the gorge less than half a mile; there are two flanks of about two hundred and fifty yards' length, joining the northern face to the natural flanks offered by the hills; the eastern one with

---

* Tod's Travels in Western India, pp. 40ff.
* Jour. R. As. Soc. vol. V. pp. 78ff.
its semi-arched battlements, reaching halfway up the scoop of the hill, is in a tolerable state of preservation, but the remainder is in ruins, the bastions have fallen in, and are only faintly to be traced through the jungle. A ditch, of the usual Hindu dimensions, surrounds the wall; the masonry I was surprised to find for the major part of well-chiselled stone, dove-tailed grooves for clamps; the iron or lead which may have been used for this purpose has doubtless been long since pilfered. There were originally two gateways to the north and west.” The last only was still standing till within a few years ago, and bears the name of Râmapoḷa, but only a fragment of it now remains.

“The area contained within the limits I have above described is now tenanted only by wild beasts, and other jungle inhabitants; mounds or lines of rubbish faintly pourtray the lines of streets, though I am disposed to consider the houses were chiefly of frail materials; nothing remains as witness of its former state save an insignificant temple near the eastern wall, two small flat-roofed ones of the earlier age of Brâhmanism, a splendid well, itself worthy of description, and the ark or royal citadel, the contents of which peculiarly merit notice; wells of good masonry are sunk here and there, which the traveller should take heed not to stumble into. This ark occupies the centre of the area, and contains, originally guarded by a wall all round, the palace† and its adjuncts;

† The palace is probably represented by a mound of stones in front of the splendid ruin of the Navalâkha Temple.
a large bathing-reservoir, surrounded with small apartments as if for dressing-rooms to the zanâna, if not the zanâna itself, is separated from the palace by a court."

Various accounts and dates are given of the destruction of this city; it seems most probable, however, that some time during the first half of the fourteenth century, Jâm Unâd invaded Barâdâ and besieged the Rânâ in Ghumli. After a long contest, Unâd, despairing of success, returned with his army to Kachh. Here, according to tradition, his son Bâmani,† ashamed of the disgraceful termination of his father’s expedition, assumed the command of the army and conducted it back to Ghumli, which place he reduced after an obstinate siege of twelve months. The Sammâs destroyed the city, which the Jeîvâs, from superstition, did not attempt to rebuild, but removed their capital to Châya, near the sea-coast. Purbandar, said to be on the site of Sada-mapa, mentioned in the Bhâgavata Purâna, was at first the port of Châya, but has since become the seat of government of the Jeîvâ chief.§

Probably owing to the resistance made by the Baradâ Rânâs, the Sammâs, after reducing Ghumli, returned to Kachh, without establishing their authority in the country. Jâm Unâd, however, is said to have given his territory in Sindh in charity to the Chârans before setting out to conquer another, and on Bâmani’s arrival in † May this not have been Manâi, mentioned in the Kachh annals?

Kachh on his way back he formed the design of establishing himself there, and succeeded in doing so.]

KESOD.

This place is situated on the banks of the Kesod river, and has two strong forts. After the taking of Junâgañh, it together with Chorvâd became a jagir of the Râizâdâhs. In this district the Rajpût Lâthias, Sarvaiyas, and others, who are descendants of the Chuñâsamâ Rajpûts, originally Zamindârs of Sindh, hold jagirs.

MÁLIÀ.

Málìà has a fort with towers, and is situated on the river Mekâl. The Zamindârs are of the Hâthi tribe. The parganah is small, but abounds in mangoes.

CHORVÂD.

Chorvâd is situated near the sea-shore, and has two strong forts; and several villages belong to it. At a distance of one kos from Chorvâd the river Birdami falls into the sea, but though it is so near to the sea there is no bandar, on account of the paucity of inhabitants; there are, however, fine gardens and beautiful fields. Betel-leaves unequalled in agreeable taste and pungency are grown in this place, and are even exported to Hâlâr, Kachh, and Sorath; also all kinds of vegetables grow. The total revenue is 50,000 koûts; there are thirteen villages under it. The forts with four towers of Kukasvadā and Visāval are also on one side of Chorvād.

|| From Antiquities of Kâthiâyâd and Kachh, pp. 173, 183.

Of Pattan Diva.

This is a strong fort situated on the sea-shore, surrounded by a fosse full of water. The rivers Hiran, Sarasvatī, and Kapilā flow near the base of the fort. In ancient times the zamindāri of this place belonged to Parmār Rājpūts. The slaughter of the Yādavas and of Śrī Kṛishṇa in this locality is recorded in the Prabhāsa Kathā. Here great quantities of mangoes, water-melons, and gunda fruits are produced, which are exported. Verāval is the seaport of this district. Nia'mat Khān Lodhi, an adherent of the Navāb Bahādur Khān, built a strong fort, which in the Saṃvat year 1824 (A.D. 1767) was repaired by the Divānjī Sāheb Amarji, and was repaired for the second time in 1845 (A.D. 1788). Divān Raghunāth, son of Amarji and Dālābhaji, brother of Amarji, were besieged here by Rāṇā Sultānji of Purbandar in one of his warlike expeditions, as will be narrated in the proper place.

Śrī Somānthā* of Pattan the adherents of Islām believe to have been brought from Mekka during the time of Abraham the Friend of God; but the Hindus hold that it existed here from all eternity, as a Śiva-liṅga by Chandramā.

† See Note 4 at page 68.
This place was devastated by Sulṭān Maḥmūd the Ghaznavide in the Saṃvat year 1078 (A.D. 1021), by Shams Khān in 1375 (A.D. 1318), by Zafar Khān the Shāh of Gujarāt in 1568 (A.D. 1511), and by Tātar Khān bin Zafar Khān nine years later, who forcibly converted many persons to his own religion.

During the time of Sulṭān Maḥmūd the Ghaznavide, the Ghuri Pādishāhs, and the Sulṭāns of Gujarāt, nobody could prosper without adopting Islām. Accordingly many became Muḥammadans here, as for instance the Kasbātīs, who are to this day called Paṭṭani, and are mostly subject to the governor of Junāgadh, but they revolted often and erected forts, such as Sutrāpāḍā, Hirākoṭ, Dhāmlej, Lodhva, Pushnāvara, Lāthi, &c., trying to assert their independence.

Gorakhmaḍi is a place belonging to the Kānphāṭā Yogis, and noted from ancient times in all parts for hospitality both to travellers and refugees, and its charitable daily meal (ṣadāvrat) was well known throughout the country. It was for a long time under the protection of many successive governments; gradually, however, the Paṭṭanīs began to drive away horses from the place and commit robberies, wherefore Madaninātha, who was the chief Yogi, buried himself alive. This event brought on the ruin of the Paṭṭanīs, who commenced to live in discord among themselves and with the people whom they hated; accordingly they appointed Nia'mat Khân Lodi as their governor, from whom they afterwards again revolted, but he slew some of them, and then, at the invitation of the inhabitants, went to Kutianâ. The Lodhi tower is a monument of his rule. His history is this:—Nia'mat Khân used to live at Ahmadâbâd in Sheikpûra, on the bank of the river Sâbarmati, and obtained Upletâ,* Kutianâ, Patân, and Koûnâr as a jagir from the Shâh of Gujarât, and after he had properly settled the affairs of all those places he betook himself to Patân and peopled Verâval, which the Patânîs had laid waste, and there he also built a fort. Now, since the Patânîs would not suffer him to enter Patân, he removed in the space of seven months all the thorny bushes and trees which obstructed his movements between Patân and Verâval, and, commencing the war in earnest, established a thanâ at Sutraḍa. The Patânîs marched against him, but were put to flight after great slaughter, and compelled to submit to Nia'mat Khân's government. A few days afterwards Nia'mat Khân obtained a chance and marched with his troops into the town, and, having also obtained aid from Verâval, put many Patânîs to the sword, and on this occasion his Divân, Isvaradás, was wounded, but many Patânîs were beheaded by the executioner, and many thrown into the sea. Nevertheless the Patânîs

*Upletâ is an important mahâl now belonging to the Gondal State.
again assembled to the number of three thousand men, and, under the leadership of Sayyid Miân, scaled the walls of the fort by means of ladders, but Nia'mat Khân routed them again, and after encountering much opposition remained ruling in the city. Some time afterwards Mânâji Angriâ made a descent on Verâval in ships, and, after fighting during three days and nights, he made peace and received the gift of a horse as nazârânâh. The Portuguese of Diâ also made some attacks, but retired disappointed.

He plundered the villages of Kâlâwad and Bânt-wâ, in Hâlâr, and defeated his pursuers, and established a right to tribute over certain villages.

Sultâna Bibi, the paternal aunt of the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân, obtained possession of the fort, and ruled for sixteen years. After some time the Paṭṭânîs considering Sheikh Miân—who was one of the Kasbâtîs of Mângrol—a man of good disposition, allowed him to enter the fort, and he commenced to conduct the government. Seeing the pride and insolence of Pâhâdi and Chand and Firoz Shâh, however, and, fearing lest they might expel him, he drove the Paṭṭânîs from their native country into hell and the flames, and made them food for alligators and jackals.

The temple of Somanâthâ, which the Musulmâns had converted into a mosque, was in ruin, and was not repaired till Sañvat 1840 (A.D. 1783), during the government of Sheikh Miân [the successor of Nia'mat Khân], when it was rebuilt by a most excellent lady, Àhîlyâ Bâi,† the wife of the Holkar Malhâr Râo Bahâdur. After thirty years the Divân Vîthal Râo Devâji, who was a Subahdâr of Kâthiâwâd under the government of the Gaikwâd, built high nagârakhanas, travellers’ houses, harams, and repaired the temples of the Jain and Kaneśvara and of Jânkiâvara.

The following are some of the temples in this city:—The temples of Daitsudan, Narsing, Mahâkâli, Anapur-na, Gaṇapati, Shashi-Bhukhan, and Pragteśvara, which last was built by the Divân Raghunâthji [a brother of the author]. The Râṇatalâo, Rudreśvara, Sûraj, Banâsvara, and Hatkesvara are some of the sacred places much visited by Hindus. Bhalkâkuṇḍ, Kadamkuṇḍ, Bangaṅgâ, Râma-Pushkara, Gaurikuṇḍ, Vishṇukuṇḍ, Brahmâkuṇḍ, Rudrakuṇḍ, Sûrajkuṇḍ, and Jalprabhâs are some of the sacred tanks where the people are cleansed from their sins.

The places of pilgrimage to Mângrol-Shâh, Chandkattâl, Maghrabi-Shâh, Mâhi-Hâjat and Godar-Shâh are noted. At a distance of five kos from Paṭṭan is the Prâchî Tîrtha, celebrated far and near, and visited by pilgrims from great distances; here the śrâddha ceremonies are performed, whereby the spirits of the departed are propitiated and evil genii warded off.

In Saṅvat 1849 (A. D. 1792) the Navâb Sâheb Ałmâd Khân, with the aid of the Paṭtąnis, scaled the walls of the fort during the night by means of ladders, and expelled Sheikh Bedr-al-din.

This country, situated on the sea-shore, produces annually three crops, consisting of great quantities of red rice and vallānak [kāng], but unfit for the consumption of wealthy persons; from Purbandar as far as Mahwah and Sābar,‡ these crops are very abundant.

Without the fort of Sutrapāda the temples of Navadurgā, Bhavāni, the Sūrajkunḍ [Chāman-kunḍ], may be seen. In the same pargānah also the tīrthas of Gayātrikunḍ, Brahmākunḍ, Vishnu-Gaya are celebrated places for ablution. The revenue amounts to three and a half lākhs of koḍis.

Note 4, on Paṭṭan Somandīth, at page 64 of the text.

[Paṭṭan Somanāṭh, or Prabhāsa Paṭṭan, is a place full of interest to the antiquarian. It is a walled town of considerable size, famous in the annals of Hindu history on account of its temple containing one of the dvadāṣajoti lingas, or twelve symbols of Mahādeva, which, like the Ephesian Diana, were said to have fallen from heaven. It is one of the ratnani, or inestimable jewels, for which Surāshtra is celebrated in the Purāṇas,—the other four being the river Gomati, beautiful women, good horses, and lastly Dvārakā. The fame of the great temple of Somēśvara fired the fanatic zeal of Mahmud of Ghazni, who led an army of thirty thousand men lightly equipped against it in 1025 A.D., and reduced the fort after an obstinate resistance on the part of the Hindu chiefs, who had leagued to defend their shrine. "Fifty thousand infidels and more," says the Rozat us-safa, "were slain round this temple, which was of vast dimensions." But at length Mahmud prevailed, destroyed the sacred liṅga by a fire lighted round it to break the hardness of the stone, plundered the temple of its immense wealth, and carried off its gates to Ghazni (to appear again in history after a lapse of more than eight centuries,—when gates were brought from Kābul as trophies—believed by some to be those of Somanaṭha). The temple, it is said, was supported by fifty-six pillars, ornamented with rubies, emeralds, and other precious stones; and each of these pillars bore the name of a different king of India as its embellisher. Whether Mahmud destroyed the temple also we do not know, but it is pretty certain that not a vestige of it now remains, unless it be in the capitals and columns strewn all about and built into the walls of the present temple, of the town and its houses.

‡ This is Sābar Kundlā.

It was too profitable to the Brāhmaṇs, however, not to be soon restored by the Hindu princes under their influence. Among these its greatest benefactors were probably the Solaṅki princes of Anhilapāṭṭan, and accordingly there is evidence of its having been restored by Bhima Deva I. (A.D. 1021-1073). We find Siddha Rāja (1093-1142) visiting it about a century after its desecration by Mahmud; and again, in A.D. 1168, the great Kumārapāla, in search of a way to manifest his piety, is advised by the wily Jaina Āchārya Hemachandra to restore the temple of Someśvara. And with this is connected a tale that is perhaps worth repeating:—In two years the restoration was completed,—the temple “once more resembled Meru,” and the Brāhmaṇa, jealous of the influence of the Āchārya over the king, tried to entrap him, proposing to Kumārapāla that he should accompany the royal retinue to the dedication. When the proposal was made, the Jaina at once replied, “What need of pressing the hungry to eat? Pilgrimage is the life-of the ascetic; what need is there of an order from the king?” He then started on foot to visit the holy places of his own creed, and met Kumārapāla at Somanātha. At the inauguration of the new temple the Jaina astonished the spectators by his devotions to Śiva. At the threshold of the temple he exclaimed, “In the splendour of this shrine Mahādeva, who dwells in Kailāsa, is surely present.” Then entering and going through the prescribed gesticulations before the linga, he said, “Thou existest, whatever be thy place, whatever be thy time, whatever be thy name, of whatsoever nature thou art. Thou art he in whom is no guilty act, no guiltiness consequent upon the act,—one only god. Praise be to thee! He who has destroyed the affections, which are the seeds that produce the bud of existence, be he Brahmā, be he Vishṇu, be he Śiva, to him be praise!” Then falling flat on the ground he worshipped Śiva in the dandavata. All this was done with an object; and after the ceremonies were over, Kumārapāla and Hemachandra entered the shrine alone, closing the door behind them.
Here, the story says, the Āchārya made Someśvara reveal himself to the king and address him thus:—‘O king, this monk is an incarnation of all the gods; he is free from deceit; to him it is given to behold the divinity as a pearl in his hand; he knows the past, present, and future; understand that the path he shall show you is, without doubt, the road to liberation.’ The credulous king was caught, and there and then the Jaina administered to him a vow to abstain from animal food and fermented liquor to the end of his life. The temple of Somanātha was then left in charge of Vṛihaspāti Gauḍa, a Kanauj Brāhmaṇ; but, perhaps chagrined at the victory of Hemachandra, he reviled the Jaina religion, for which he was deprived of his place, and only restored to it after making the most humble submission to the influential Āchārya.

If the remains that still exist are not those of the temple of Bhima Deva and Kumārapāla, it is difficult to say to whom we owe them. It seems probable that for more than a century after Kumārapāla’s time it was unmolested; but the Muhammadan had cast his eyes on the rich province, and at length, in 1297, the Šultān, Ālau’dd-din Khilji, sent his brother Alaf Khān, and Nusrat Khān, his prime minister, to effect the conquest of Gujarāt. Then it was that the idol shrines suffered, and the famous idol of Somanātha was again destroyed. A century later, in 1395, Muzaffar Shāh I. led an expedition against Paṭtān, and, destroying all the Hindu temples, he built mosques in their places,—or more probably he converted them into mosques; and again, in 1413, Ferishtah tells us that his grandson and successor, Aḥmad Shāh I., on his return from an expedition against the Rā of Junāgaḍh, "destroyed the temple of Somapur, wherein were found many valuable jewels and other property." Later still Maḥmud Shāh I., surnamed Begara (1459-1511) is named by Hindu tradition as having sent an army to reduce the place, when he built a mosque on the site of the temple. The building, however, still attests that the Muslim only desecrated the Hindu temple, defaced its sculptures, and converted it into a place of worship for the followers of Islam, but did not raze it.

This famous ruin occupies a rising ground, probably a rock with a coating of soil upon it, close to the sea-shore. It faces the east, and on the south side there are still considerable remains of the old Hindu sculptures, much resembling those at Amaranātha, near Kalyāṇa, but on a larger scale. On the other sides, the outer facing of the walls has been almost entirely removed: indeed, until a few years ago, this fine old ruin was used as a sort of quarry from which to obtain building-stones. The outer pyramidal roof of the maṇḍapa and the great spire over the shrine had been destroyed by the Muhammadans, and hemispherical domes substituted in their place. Over the eastern entrance they erected two clumsy minarets, and threw arches in between the pillars of the central octagon which support the dome. The diameter of this octagon is about 33 feet, and the greatest width of the maṇḍapa inside is 64 feet, its length up to the door of the shrine being nearly 70 feet. The shrine itself is 18 feet 9 inches square inside, and there has been a pradakshina round it; but behind this all is destroyed. The floor has been of polished black stone or marble, some fragments of which are still found. Both the domes are now open above, and the whole has evidently been for long the haunt of cattle rather than of devotees—Muslim or Hindu.

To compensate for its loss to her religion and its local attendants the Somapada Brāhmans, the famous Ahilyā Bājī, widow of Khānde Rāo Holkar, built another temple—New Somandīha—in the town; but if the hand of time only has to do with both, it will be a neglected ruin before its aged predecessor is greatly changed.

In the town is the Surya Kundā, as the Hindus call it,—a remarkable remnant of their architecture. It has been defaced, and patched, and altered now, but when first completed it must have been a work of much elegance, forming the colonnade round a large tank—long ago filled up except a small pond about nine yards square in one corner of the enclosure. This colonnade has had at least three rows of pillars on three of its sides, and seven on the fourth,—in which are five octagonal areas each about 20 feet across. The columns still standing, some of them imbedded in the outer walls, are about two hundred and fifty in number, and nearly all of them have been carved in the most elaborate style of Hindu art. A wall has been built in, connecting the outer row of pillars, and a mimbar and mihrabs have been formed to adapt it to Muhammadan worship.

Near this is a plain building, its walls outside covered with plaster, and apparently an ordinary Muhammadan house with scarcely any windows; inside, however, it proves to have been a Jaina-temple of an interesting type, and said to have a cellar (bhoinorun) under it. It is now used as a storehouse by a Muhammadan, who says it has been in his family for at least a hundred and fifty years.

A little to the north of Paṭṭan Somanātha there is a large cluster of sacred places, many of them very unpretending in appearance, but each with its legend or associations. First is Triveni—‘three plaited locks’—the junction of the three rivers Hiranyâ, Kapila, and Sarasvatī,—a ṭirtha for pilgrims bathing, and without a visit to which the pilgrimage to Dvârakâ would scarcely be considered complete. Further out is the temple of Rudrâśvara, built on the site of an older temple of Kedârâśvara destroyed by the Muhammadans,—some of the columns and sculptures of which, however, have been employed in the restored building. Beside it is the dargah of Muhammad Shâh;—for Islâmite superstition is fond of thrusting itself into notice in the scenes where it has displayed its iconoclastic fanaticism. This dargah and that of Abbi Shâh, a little further out, are but miserable places, scarcely worth a visit, unless it be to half suffocate one’s self in the labyrinth of little cells at the back of the first. Beyond some quarries is the old temple of Śârya Nârâyanâ, whose dome and spire have suffered at the hands of violence, but have been plastered over to keep out the rain. Under it is a cellar or cave.

On the banks of the river Hiranyâ we find sarga or Dehotsarga—an old pipal tree with a very small temple beside it, and some huts forming a monastery; this is a place of great sanctity, for under the pipal, of which the present one is a traditionary scion, Kṛishṇa lay down to rest at noon, when a Bhilla—mistaking his tawny coverlet for a deer, or the mark on his foot for the eyes of one—sped an arrow with such mortal force as bereft his godship of life. Islāmite devotion here consecrates a place of prayer for its votaries under their sacred tree, and desecrates its vicinity by making it a place of graves. The Hindus have, many a time since its erection, had the power to destroy the offensive and ugly wall, but they do not seem possessed of such aggressive and iconoclastic propensities. South from this are the small shrines of Koṭēśvara,—or the million liṅgas, containing only large fragments of the symbol,—and Bhimeśvara or Bhimanātha, now much dilapidated. Not far from these is Bhalka Kūnda, a reservoir—empty at least in the dry season—in excellent repair, about three hundred and eighty yards in circumference, and forming a regular polygon of sixteen sides, with three oval apertures on one for the entrance of the water. To the west of Pāṭtan, the spire of the Śeshi Bhushan or Bhidiyo temple attracts the eye by its height—owing principally, however, to the higher level on which the temple stands: it is a restoration, rather than a renewal, of an old temple, and is of similar style to that of Śūrya Nārāyaṇa.

It is curious to find here remnants of the Brāhmaṇical monasteries. There are several of them in this neighbourhood, not apparently of any great extent or with numerous inmates, nor are the buildings in any way pretentious—they are mere collections of huts.

[Note 5:—on Ahilyâ Bât.]

The famous Ahilyâ Bât was born in 1735 of a family of the name of Sindhia, and was married to Malhâr Râo Holkar’s only son Khande Râo, who was killed at the siege of Kambhir, near Dtg, in 1754. By him she had a son Malli Râo, and a daughter Muktâ Bât. Malli Râo succeeded his grandfather Malhâr Râo, but nine months after died mad, when Ahilyâ Bât succeeded to the administration of the Holkar government, 1765, and ruled with great wisdom, firmness, and talent till her death in 1795. She was a most devoted Hindu, and built sacred edifices at Jagannâtha, Nâsik, Elurâ, Nimâr, Maheśvara, Somanâtha, Dvârakâ, Gâyâ, Kedarnâtha, Ramesvaram, &c. Her daughter Muktâ Bât became a sati with her husband, Yasvânt Râo Pansâys, and Ahilyâ Bât built a beautiful temple to her memory at Maheśvara, on the Narmadâ.

ACCOUNT OF KORÎNÂR.

This town is the residence of a governor or hâ-kam, and is situated on the banks of the Shîn-gora. The temple of Mûta Dvârakâ and the port is on the sea-coast. The Bokhârî and Qâderi Sayyids obtained it in waṣifah from the Amirs and Shâhs of Gujarât, and dwell here; but in § Notes of a Visit to Kâthîâvâd in 1869, pp. 17 et seq.

Sânvat 1780 the Dekhanâs [Marâthâs] prevailed, and obtained a moiety of the revenue. In course of time a peskhâsh of five thousand rupees was paid through the management of the Divânji Sâheb Amarji, and the Gâikvâdi official (mutassâddi) was not admitted to a share in the management, after whose death his younger brother the Divân Dulabhjî paid a fixed sum by way of farm. Now, in Sânvat 1871 (A.D. 1814), Govînd Râo Gâîkvâd has, by the aid of the English Government, obtained possession of the whole parganâh. In it is also situated Rudrâkya, a place of ablution for Hindus.

The revenues amount to two lâkhs of Jâmîs (2,00,000 kôdîs).

Unâ and Delvâdâ.

The forts of Unâ and Delvâdâ, built of white stone, are two kos distant from each other.

The residence of the governor looks over the river Machundri. The Talâo and the Châcheria Wâv were built in Sânvat 1515 (A.D. 1458) by a Kâyat named Somanâtha.

It is related that in ancient times, when this country was under the government of Brâhmanâs, the Râni of a Râaja whose name was Vejal, who was of the tribe of Wâjâ, happened to arrive on a visit to the temple of Sûraj, where the Musulmâns have a mosque at present, and that some Brâhmanâs immodestly and boldly lifted up the curtain of her chariot, without any civility, and had a look at her beauty. This affront the Râjputs passed by at the time, but attacked the Brâhmans on their great holiday, the 15th of Śrâvana Śud [on which they put on the sacred thread], slew many, and took the fort. In course of time, however, the Kasbâtis again expelled the Râjputs, and occasionally lived in independence, but at times acknowledged the supremacy of Muzaffarâbâd, or accepted a governor from Junâgaâdh; and for some time Manohardâs and Somaji Jikâr were the Mutasaddis in behalf of the Navâb Mahâbat Khânji, whom they accepted as their ruler.

In Śâmvat 1825 (A.D. 1768) the Divân Sâheb Amarji levied a fixed tribute from U nâ; afterwards, in Śâmvat 1827 (A.D. 1770-71), on account of the evil conduct of the Kasbâtis, Latif Mian, a Sayyid of Delvâdâ, conquered the place from them, and they were banished from their vatan, but through the aid of the Divân Sâheb Amarji they were again reinstalled in their former holdings.

The temple of Dâmodhar, the place of pilgrimage of Hazrat-Shâh, Raghunâth, Guptapráyâga, and Mahâ Kâleśvara are the ornaments of this mahâl. Without the town is a tank of sweet water, and at a distance of twelve kos is the temple of Tul si S yâm, with a spring of hot water; and ten kos further, at D oha n, is a fine temple of Mahâ d e v a. In the woods are many wild plantain trees.

The revenues amount to three lâkhs of Jâmîs.
ACCOUNT OF RÂNPUR.

This is a fort at the foot of Mount Girnar, and is the jāgir of Muzaffar Khân II. Its produce amounts to thirty thousand Jâmis.

VISÂVADAR.

This is a fort with four towers. Most of this pargana is deserted, and on its frontier is nothing but jungle and forest of useful and of jungly trees. The Gir hills are forty kos in length and twenty-five in breadth; there is also cultivation in some parts.

The revenue of this pargana is 20,000 kodis.

MUZAFFARÂBÂD.

This country was colonized by Muzaffar Shâh Gujarâti in Saṃvat 1632 (A.D. 1575), who built the fort on the sea-shore and garrisoned it with Râjputs; they cultivate both dry and irrigated land.

The revenues amount to one lâkh of Jâmîs.

THE ISLAND OF DIV, WHICH FORMERLY BELONGED TO JUNÂGAÞH.

In ancient times the zamindârs of this island were Vâghelâ Râjputs; but Shams-al-din Khân took it from Vaghelâ Jayasingh in the Saṃvat year 1387 (A.D. 1330) and established a thânah, and during the reign of Sultân Bahâdur Shâh the Mutassaddis of this place were Kâvâm-al-mulk and Malik Tughân Ben Ayâz. In Saṃ-vat 1588 (A.D. 1531) some Portuguese arrived treacherously in the guise of merchants, but they were captured and surrendered to the Sultân, who made Musulmâns of them; on that occasion also several cannon were taken, and the two which are [in the U p a r k o t] at J u n â g a d h probably came from this place; afterwards, however, the Portuguese came into the possession of D i v, and the manner in which this happened is as follows:—

When Bahâdur Shâh, who had come, on the second occasion, by way of Khambâyat to D i v, the Portuguese who were there represented to him that they had brought three hundred mans of rose-water and of a târ, which were in danger of being spoilt before merchants arrived from various parts to remove them, and requested to be allowed to build four walls. The Sultân agreed, but after his departure they erected a strong fort, which they provided with cannon and muskets, and prepared for war. When this news reached the Sultân, he determined to get possession of the fort by treachery and to expel the Portuguese; he arrived accordingly, but, being aware of his intention, they slew Sulţân Bahâdur Shâh in Sañvat 1593 (A.H. 943), and became masters of the island. The names of the six men who were killed together with Bahâdur Shâh are as follows:—Malik Amîn, Shuja'et Khân, Lashkar Khân [Âlp Khân], Sikandar Khân, and Gañesh Râo the brother of Maidau
Rào. It is asserted that the fort of Dīvbandar and the buildings with gardens were all constructed by Malak Ayâz.

The revenues amount to one lâkh of Jâmis (1,50,000 koṭīs).

ACCOUNT OF KÂTHIÁVÂD.

For some reason or other, Kâṭhîs of thirty different tribes emigrated to this country from Khorásân, and some also from Pâvar, a district in Kachh. The Wâlâ Kâṭhîs are of the stock of the Râjput Wâlâs, the lords of the district of Dhânk, one of whom married a Kâthiâni damsel, and was therefore expelled from the Râjput caste, and entered that of the Kâṭhîs. From this union resulted two sons, Khumân and Khâchar respectively, to whom the Râja of Junâgaḍh granted a small territory. And when this territory became populous that zillâ was called Kâthiâvâd.

It is related that Shams Khân slew the Wâlâ Râja in battle, and took possession of the town of Kileśvara, situated in the Baraḍâ hills; and when he conquered Okhâmandal he demolished the temple of Jagat, placed over the spot a sort of mosque, and returned. Châmparâj, son of Ebhâl, the Kâthi, happened to have a daughter of wonderful beauty, whom Shams Khân coveted without having seen her, but Châmparâj refused all his offers, as no marriage is to be contracted with persons following a different religion; accordingly he was attacked by Shams Khân and slain, with his daughter, and 1,800 adherents all of whom died fighting bravely.

Some time afterwards Verâ Wâlâ, a Kâthi, with the permission of the Navâb Bahâdur Khân, built the fort of Jetpur. The Kâthîs pay a great deal of tribute and annually one horse likewise to Junâgâdh; but they live on plunder and make raids to the extreme limits of Gujarât.

The beauty of the Kâthi women was remarkable in former times, and the Khumân Kâthîs used to carry off by force handsome women from among the lower classes; now, however, Kâthi women are frightful to look at, like demons and ghûls. The Kâthîs are brave and hospitable, and their principal towns are the forts of Jetpur, Mendârdâ, Bîlkhâ, Bagasarâ, Kundalâ, Jasdan, Chital, Sudâmrrâ, Änandapur, Bhâdlâ, Dhândhalpur, and Pâliyâd [with large or small forts]. Ga-dhârâ is also a fort, but not a strong one.

ACCOUNT OF AMRELI.

After the demise of the Navâb Sâheb Hâmîd Khân, the Gâïkvâd's Nâib Divân Sâheb Viûthal Râo, by the aid of the English, took from his son the whole of Amreli, by way of nazârânâh, though formerly the Gâïkvâd had but a third-share in the revenue; now, however, in Saṃvat 1869 (A.D. 1812-13), the Gâïkvâd took the whole pargana, and built a fort and ruled independently.
The revenues amount to six lâkhs of Jâmîs (about Rs. 2,00,000).

ACCOUNT OF THE MAHÂLS WHICH PAY TRIBUTE TO JUNÁGADH.

Purbańdar, situated on the sea-shore, has a well frequented port and a strong citadel. Here the zamindâr is a Jēṭhvā Râjput who is a descendant of Mâkâraḍhvaja, son of Hanumân. The town contains numerous gardens, and both sweet and brackish water; and the inhabitants, who trade with the ships, are Vâniâs and Bhâtiâs. The temples of Kedârâṭhâ Mahâdeva, of Sudâma, of Verâvalimâtâ, of Porabhavâni, and the Kedârkunda, are much visited by the inhabitants.

The Râjas here bore the title of Râṅâ, and in ancient times the fort of Ghumli, situated in the Barâqâ hills, was the capital of the state; it was, however, deserted seven hundred years ago, on account of the devastations committed by the army of the Jâm which he had brought from Sindh, and which demolished the fort. The citadel of Bhańvâr obtained its name from the Râṅâ Bhańna (Jēṭhvâ).

The government of the Râṅâs extended as far as Nâgnâh, founded by the Râṅâ Nâga, and the temple of Nâganâtha is also one of his memorials. About three hundred years ago the Râṅâ was put to flight by the army of the Jâm Râval, and took refuge with the Mer tribe.

|| See above, p. 58.
The rule of the Jām extended as far as Rānā Wāv and the creek of Bhokirah; but by his liberality, justice, and distribution of food the Rānā attached that wild tribe to himself, and they conquered for him with their swords the country on the west side of the Baraḍā hills, and acknowledged him as their sovereign.

In course of time Nāgars from all sides were invited and settled at the places of Chhāya, Rānā Wāv, Mokal, Dhebar, &c., which became their jagirs; and the Rānā entrusted the management of his affairs to them, and to this day a tribe of Nāgars is called after the name of those villages.

In Saṅvat 1789 (A. D. 1722) Mubāriz-al-mulk made his appearance at Māḍhavpur in order to collect peshkash, and with the assistance of the Navâb Bahâdur Khân of Junâgaḍh the fort of Māḍhavpur was taken. In this contest [Ranchoḍdās] Nâgar, the Thānahdâr of the place, was slain, and after the locality had been plundered the inhabitants paid forty thousand Jâmi koḍās as a ransom for the image of Pâras-nâtha.

It is related that there was a lady named Sôn, of the lineage of a râja of Bālambā. She composed a hemistich in Hindî, and giving it to a Brâhmaṇ informed him that she would be ready to take any man for her husband who could compose the other hemistich. The Brâhmaṇ started on his journey according to her direction, but was disappointed until he arrived in G hum 1 i, where he met the Kuňwar Halâman Jeṭhvâ, the son of Sëh yâ Râṇâ, who wrote a hemistich as required, and handed it to the Brāhmaṇ. On his return the Brāhmaṇ delivered the line to Râṇî Sôn, who, intent on keeping her promise, mounted a chariot and arrived in Ghumli; but alas! alas! for times in which females do not break their promises, but men in one hour turn away from their oaths and written obligations, like the revolving sphere! The Râṇâ Sëh yâ heard of the bride's beauty, and himself became enamoured of her and desired to obtain her favours; but he had apprehensions as to Halâman, and therefore immediately banished him for a term of twelve years from his realm. Halâman departed to Anjâr, a town in Kachh, where his paternal aunt dwelt; but Sôn likewise returned to her country, and Sëh yâ Jeṭhvâ reaped only sorrow and disappointment. One day, however, Halâman was rocking himself in a hammock slung to the branch of a tree, when some fairies perceived his beauty and took him up into the air; when they discovered, however, that he was only a human being, they dropped him to the ground. The fall almost killed Halâman, but as his aunt knew that his very life was bound up with his love for Sôn she despatched a ship with the news to her; and Sôn, whilst embarking in it, exclaimed—

"A ship I mount, O wind of mercy blow, Perchance my love again will greet my sight!"
The ship arrived more quickly than the fleeting cloud, and when Sôn took Halâman into her arms he recovered consciousness, and although discarded by fairies he was soon joined to one as beautiful.

In 1790 (A.D. 1733) Mubâriz-al-mulk, the Subâh of Gujarât, and his commander of the forces, Safdar Khân Bâbi, arrived with an army at Pûrbandar, and the Râñâ, being unable to offer any resistance, fled and embarked everything he could, with his family, in ships and put to sea. The army took possession of seven cannon, with all the baggage which had been left behind, and was ready to demolish the fort, when the helpless Râñâ made his appearance and saved the fort from destruction by paying one lâkh and twenty-five thousand Jâmîs.

In Saîvat 1805 (A.D. 1748) Kutîânâ was taken by the Râñâ from the Qasbâtis, and held by him for ten years, after which time it fell into the power of Hâsham Khân, with the coöperation and aid of the Qasbâtis. In Saîvat 1782 the Râñâ bought Madhâpur from the Desâis of Mângrol, and incorporated it with his possessions. In Saîvat 1830 Sheikh Miân from Mângrol took, under cover of night, possession of the fort of Nâvî, situated on the sea-coast, by scaling its walls with ladders, but the Râñâ Sultânji called to his aid Jâdejâ Kumbhoji, Zamindâr of Gondal, who was a connection of his by mahals tributary to junagadh.

marriage, and erected batteries against the fort, and shekh mian obtaining quarter surrendered the place.

in the sañvat year 1334 he built the fort of bhetâli, on the limits of the country of Nagar (the borders of Hâllâr); it was beleaguered by mehrâman, a khavâs of the Jâm, for some time, with a native army. to make short work of the matter, he constructed a moveable fort called Rângaâdh, and making an assault reached the walls, against which he placed ladders; but the assailants had not ascended to the middle of them when such a fire of musketry poured upon them from the fort, and fiery projectiles were thrown upon the Musulmâns, that they became unwilling fire-worshippers and retreated, while burning the slain Hindus became superfluous. in spite of this disgraceful repulse, mehrâman khavâs did not raise the siege, and thakar premji lohâna, kâmdâr of Râña sulânji, opened negotiations for aid through a paternal uncle of the author, whose name was govindji, for a long time faujdâr of kuûtianâ. when the victorious army approached nearer, mehrâman khavâs raised the siege and made peace; whereupon the army marched from that place towards okhâ to subdue the robbers of P o s i t a r â, who robbed the people by land and by sea, and those events have already been narrated. the account of this will be given in connection with Junâgaâdh.

in the sañvat year 1839 thakar premji,
Kâmdâr of Purbandar, having become haughty and fat like a tumour, in the exuberance of his power, made an alliance with Mehrâman Khavâs of Navânagar and Kumbhâji of Gondal:

A tree which has scarcely yet taken root
A strong brave man will soon eradicate;
But if you leave it long to thrive and grow
No strength of windlass will pull up its root.

As the Divân Amarji, like the brilliant sun, was day by day prospering more, the three tâluk-dârs just mentioned attempted to break his power; they attacked him, but were quickly put to flight with their troops.

In Samvat 1843 the Divân Amarji took Chorvâd from Sanghâji Raizâdâh, a relative of Rânâ Sultânji, who, on account of his quarrels with Pîthâyet Hâthi, the Zamindâr of Mâlya, was unable to pay the wages of his troops. After accomplishing this object, the army of Junâgaâdh marched to Verâval, held by the Jamadârs Rakhia Bânhura and Ibhrâhim Khân Paṭṭanî, who were disloyal towards the Navâb Sâheb; the fort walls were scaled by ladders, and Diler Khân, the cowardly Thânâdâr, took to his heels; so that the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji was able in a very brief time to conquer both the forts.

In Samvat 1855 Kalyân She̅, the Divân of the Navâb Sâheb at Junâgaâdh, fled to Kutiâna, where he raised the standard of revolt, and plundered the country of Drâphâ, but the Râñâ Sulṭânji prepared an army to encounter him, and the author being in the Râñâ’s service was appointed to march with cannon and troops to punish Kalyâñ Sheṭ.

The beginning of Divân Ranchodji’s remaining in the service of Râñâ Sulṭânji was as follows:—
The author had taken his departure from Nagar to Mângrol with some horsemen to celebrate the wedding of his younger brother Dalpatrâm, whilst the Divân Sâheb Raghunâth had himself remained in Nagar; and Mehrâman Khâvâs, perceiving the field free, and disregarding politeness, imprisoned the Nâgar Kârkuns of the tribe of Buj who dwelt in the same street as we did. The Divân Sâheb being helpless, the Sirbandi attached to the Divân’s house having gone to Mângrol, despatched a letter to the author, which reached him whilst he was encamped at Devrâ, on his return journey from Mângrol; accordingly he sent all his men to Navânagar, and went himself to the Râñâ Sulṭânji at Purbandar.

In fine, when I arrived in the vicinity of Kuṭiânâ, Kalyâñ Sheṭ, Jamadâr Nâsâr bin Yâmani, with Yahya and others, also Gangâsingh Purbhiâ with Qasbâti and other troopers, marched out to the sound of kettle-drums with banners and cannon, drawing their troops up in battle array near the Idgâh of Kuṭiânâ. On perceiving this display I slowly approached the foe with my troops till we could almost touch them with our swords and spears, but they ran like a herd of sheep from brave lions, and did not stop till they reached the bâzâr of the town, and their cannon and some of their men were taken. As a reward for this victory the Râñâ presented me with a necklace of pearls and a palanquin.

In Sâmvat 1864 [A.D. 1807] Hâlâji Kuñvar made Jamadâr Omâr his secret partner, and by promises of gifts of pearls, &c. he obtained possession of the fort of Khirasrâ from Subadâr Khân Afgan. He then plundered Mâdhavpur and took possession of the fort of Nâvibandar by scaling its walls with ladders in the darkness of the night; his intention was to take Purbandar also, but it was not fulfilled. Râñâ Sulâtânij called to his aid the Divânji Sâheb Vîthal Râo, who, through the intervention of the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, under whose protection Omâr the Jamadâr was, suppressed the rebellion by paying one lâkh of Jâmîs [kodâs]. In the Sâmvat year 1865 (A. D. 1808) Hâlâji Kuñvar, through the Divân Raghunâthji, under pretence of requiring protection, but in reality to capture his own father, had taken into his service the Jamadâr Murâd Khân, Fâqîr Muḥammad Mekrâni, and Sheikh Muḥammad Zobaidi the Arab, and again rebelled, but, being unable successfully to oppose the Râñâ, they fled to Kandornâ, which was in their possession, where they took refuge, but surrendered it after a few days to the Jâm Sâheb Jasâji, who promised them their former service and gave them the sum of one lâkh of Jâmís [kodês]. Hádáji despatched his Vakils to implore assistance from the Huzûr A lex â n d e r Wâlkêr Sâheb, who had accompanied the Subah of Kâthiâvâd, Divân Sâheb Vîthāl Râo, in aid of the Gâikvâd, and who, levying tribute, had established their fear amongst the zamindârs. The noble-minded Sâheb immediately marched, took the fort in two hours, but granted pardon to the garrison; and, as Kuṭiânâ was near, by order of the Divânji Sâheb Raghunâthji, the author was admitted to the honour of waiting on the Sâheb Bahâdur, and offering as nazaránâh a horse and a Yemani sword set with jewels; he met Ballantyne Sâheb and Robertson Sâheb twice, and twice received a handsome dress. On that occasion the Colonel said, “You are well disposed towards the Sarkâr Company Bahâdur, and you will be much regarded. Be of good cheer, and if you come with me to Baroda you will obtain an honourable post in the Company’s service.” But, as I did not think proper to separate from the country of Kuṭiânâ, I took leave at Pâl and returned.

On this occasion I had gone in the company of the Amir-like A lex â n d e r Wâlkêr to see the fort of Ghumlî, but I saw only ruins, a burnt and fallen temple, a deep wâv full of limpid water, some ancient dilapidated edifices, two tanks, and a wall on the hill which is called the fort Ābâpurâ.

In Samvat 1866 (A.D. 1809) the Râja assigned a share in the revenues of Purbandar to the servants of the Sarkâr Company Bahâdur, and the farm of the revenue to Sundarji Khatri; Prathirâj Kuñvar resisted, but on aid coming from the Company Sarkâr the fort of Chhâyâ was evacuated in two hours and made over to Hâlâji. The Kuñvar, being wounded, was captured, with his wife, but the sipâhis were so greedy to have the golden anklets of his grandmother that they cut off her feet.

After the demise of Hâlâji the reign of Prathirâj began, and the old inhabitants, who were Lohânâs and Nâgars, emigrated. Rânâ Sultanji himself was, after the death of his son, received into the mercy of God in Saṃvat 1869.

The mandir of Mâdhava râî is situated in the fort of Mâdhavpur, in the tâlukâ of Purbandar; and the kunḍa named Sita-mundri, which is very well known, is situated at a distance of two kos therefrom. In this zillâ—mung (pulse), kashiya (Phaseolus radiatus), and sugar-canes are produced; most of the soil is alluvial and produces three crops annually. The forts of Chhâyâ, Rânawâv, Adwânâ, Miâni, Navi, Kandorna, and Mâdhavpur are dependencies of this mahâl; on the west is the sea; on the east are Kutiânâ, Mahiâri, and Mângrol; on the south the sea; and on the north the hills of Baradâ and the district of Hâlâr. There are two seaports, namely Purbandar and Navi, and the revenues amount to eight lâkhs of koâs.
Description of Gondal.

This is a district of Hālār; it was deserted for some time, but Amin Khān ben Tātār Khān Ghori took charge of it in 1647 (A.D. 1590), for Muzaffar the Sultān of Gujarāt, and cultivated it. Kuńvar Vibhāji obtained it as jāgir from his father; but Kumbhāji bin Hālāji, by his good fortune and his cunning, having got the zamindāris of Dhorāji and Upletā from the Navāb Sāheb for service done and for a little money, and having taken Bāyāvādar from the Desāis Govind Rāi and others, besides some villages from the Kāṭhis and Rājputs, he built forts and established an independent rāj. His good and mild government was extensively praised. By the help of the army of the Gāikvāḍ his own attacked Trimbakrāo with a number of Kāṭhis and Girāsiās, firing some cannon at the fort of Navānagar; but the Nāgars of the vanguard of the army were slain. The fort in Gondal was built on the banks of the Gondli river in ancient times, and up to our days graves may be seen there. In the year 1828 the Marāthā army attacked that of Junāgaḍh, which was encamped at Majhevaḍī, and captured the Arab Jamadār Sālmīn, who was, however, afterwards released again.

The forts of Movīā, of Dhorāji, of Upletā, of Bāyāvādar, of Ganod, of Anāla gaḍh, and of Mengni belong to Gondal, which is bounded on the west by Đhank, on the east by the parganah of Râjkôṭ, on the west by the parganah of Dhrol, on the south by the parganah of Jetpur. These were formerly the limits, and the revenue amounts to ten lâkhs of Jâmís.

Description of Râjkôṭ.

This is a dependency of Hâlâr, and was given as a jâgîr to the holders by the Jâm Râval instead of Kâlâwad. He bestowed Sarâhâr on Masûm A’li Khân, who treacherously slew the Kâthîs that were the zamindârs of it. The fort of Râjkot was built of white stone by Lakhâji Jâdejâ on the banks of the river Aji. He divided scattered villages among his brothers, but Kotdâ and Râjpura still belong to him. In Sañvat 1875 (A.D. 1818) the English Sarkâr, the paramount power in Kâthiâvâd, built a handsome camp here. Râjkot is bounded on the east by the Panchâl, on the west by Pardhari, on the north by Wânkâner and Thân, and on the south by Kâthiâvâd.

Description of Morbi.

Morbi was given as an inâm to Rao Bhârâ by the Dehli Sultâns in Sañvat 1627 [A.D. 1550], for his surrender of Sultan Muzaffâr into the hands of Âzam Humaiyun. After Râyaji had been slain by his younger brother Kâyaji, the latter, much as he tried, could not obtain full power, and was obliged to be content with Morbi, Aândhâ, and Wâgâd. In Sañvat 1508 (A.D. 1451) the Faujdâr on the part of the Shâh of Gujârat was Toghlak Khân, who built a strong fort on the banks of the Machhu river. The revenue of this district amounts to three lâkhs of Jâmîs; it produces good jowâri, and it is bounded on the east by Jhâlavaqd, on the west by Dhrol, on the north by the Salt Rañ, and on the south by Wânkâner.

DESCRIPTION OF BHÂVANAGAR.

In ancient times most of the zillâs of this region were in the possession of the Audich string-wearers (Brâhmañs). Mokherâji, a Gohel Râjput, governed the island of Perim, and made a firm stand against the royal army which attacked him near Gundî. He obtained four chorâsîs, viz. those of Lâthi and others, from the Râja of Junâgaðh on account of the connection with his daughter. It is said that the Sultan of Gujârat, having taken the Râja, kept him prisoner in a stable for horses. A potter having arrived there from Gohelvaqd was gratuitously supplying water during the fasting month (Ramazân) to the guards, who considered themselves obliged thereby; in the mornings and evenings they were engaged in breaking the fast; on such an occasion the potter took the Râja, and, placing him on his donkey instead of the water-bag, carried him out of the town to a place where a party of Atîs was encamped, who received him in a handsome and kind way, dressed him as a jogî.
and took him to Śihor, where one of his cousins reigned. The Atîts sent in their Vakil with the following message:—"We are travellers and are in the habit of waiting on râjas; we have brought arms, jewels, and shawls; if orders are issued we will display these things and also offer presents." The Râja, who had no experience, agreed, and the Atîts, who entered the fort with their arms, seated the former Râja on the masnad and removed the new one. It is related that when the people saw the Râja in the state of a Darvaish, wearing red garments, they said, "This is a Râval," i.e. a darvaish; and from that day he obtained the title of Râval. I have also heard that when the Râja fled from this captivity he went to Dungarpur, where his maternal uncle was reigning, and where he remained for several years. As the Râja of Dungarpur was one of the brothers of the Râja of Udaipur and had the title of Râval, he bestowed it also on his nephew; but God knows best.

In Sârvat 1779 (A.D. 1722) Bhâvâsing Râval built the fort of Bâtvanâgar, of which he assigned a part of the revenues to the English and to the Peshvâ on the 3rd Vaiśâkh Śud. After him his grandson Vakhatsingji enlarged his territory by taking possession of some localities belonging to the Kolis and Kâthîs, and obtained Goghâbârâh and Râjula from the Navâb Sâheb Aḥmad Khân, and became very strong and prosperous.
BHAVANAGAR.

The tâlukâ Gôghâ was given by the Sultân of Gujarât to the Bâbis, and afterwards in Samvat 1810 (A.D. 1753) it came into the possession of Momin Khân, and then into that of the Śrîmant Peshvâ. When in course of time Sohrâb Khân and Momin Khân removed Sher Zamân Khân from Goghâ, it fell into the hands of Vakhatsingh, and he is still the joint possessor of it with the English.

The fort of Talâjâ was taken by the aid of the Divânji Sâheb Amarji; and, Samvat 1850 (A.D. 1793), Wakhatsinghji took Chital, which from the number of the Kâthîs, and the aid of the Nâvâb Sâheb Hâmid Khân Bahâdur, was very strong, and he destroyed the fort of Jasdan. In the Samvat year 1852, after the fighting was over, the Nâvâb Sâheb granted a partân for Kundlâ and other places on condition of paying tribute. The parganahs Mâhuva, Talâjâ, Râjulâ, Kundlâ, Sihor, Dihor, Trâpaj, Umrâlâ, Pâtana, and Botâd are dependencies of Bhâvanagar. The fort of Sihor is the capital, and is situated between two mountains. The temple of Rovâpurî in Bhàvanagar is a celebrated one. The three ports are Mâhuva, Goghâ, and Bhàvanagar, to which numerous merchants resort in ships. Here fine ámbas (mangoes), gundâs, and oleanders (kanâr) are produced.

Pâlitânâ belongs to one of his bhâyâd. The fort is situated at the foot of Mount Saturñjaya, which contains many ancient temples visited by pilgrims from distant places. The limits of Bhâvanagar are the sea on the east, on the west the parganah of Amreli, on the north Jhâlâvâd and Sri Bhimnâth; on the south the parganah of Unâ Bâbriavâd and of Muzaffarrâbad. The produce amounts to eight lâkhs of rupees.

Description of Jhâlâvâd.

This zillâ began to pay tribute during the time of the Divânji Sâheb Amarji, in Samvat 1832 (A.D. 1795), and was for some time the jâgir of Umdat-ul-Mulk. Chroniclers narrate that in Samvat 1320 (A.D. 1263) Siddhârâjâya Sînasîhâ, the Râja of Gujarât, reigned in the capital city of Piran Paṭtan, who had a wife beautiful as a fairy; it happened that a Deva or Râkshasa fell in love with her, and had intercourse with her every night after tying the Râja her husband up in a corner.

Hemistich:—An ungenial consort is great misery.

The Râja had a confidential and faithful servant, a Râjput of the Jhâlâ tribe, whose name was Makwânâ Harpâl Valad Kesar, and to whom he promised a fine jâgir if he would relieve him from this enemy. The said Râjput agreed, kept his word and removed the Bhut; the Râja on his part was also desirous to fulfil his promise, and asked the Râjput how he wished to be rewarded. The latter replied, “Let every village be mine where I can bind a toran or string of green leaves during one night.” The Râja agreed, and in one night Jogini—whose devotee the Rajput was—tied 1799 torans to as many villages, but when the Rajput arrived at the gate of Digsar the morning began to dawn. Accordingly the Râja gave all the villages thus marked to the Jhâlâ Rajput, and seven villages to the Chârans. As the Jhâlâ had adopted the Râni of Râja Siddhrâo Jayasiîha to be his sister, he gave her the five hundred villages of the B hâl as a present, and kept the others for himself. Hâl wâd and D hârâng a d râ were constituted seats of government, and the other parganahs were distributed among his sons and cousins. In course of time such places as Limbaîî, Sâlâ, Vânkâner, Lakhtar, Vâdhwân, Thân, Chuâdâ, and others became separate talukâs, and were adorned with strong forts. Pratâp-singh Râja, in order to aid Jâm Tamâchi bin Râi Singh, who was his nephew, had given his own daughter to Mubâriz-al-mulk, and the daughter of one of his cousins, who was the Zâmin-dâr of Mâthak, to Salâbat Khân Bâbi, by whose support he seated the Jâm on the throne of Nagar.

Sadâśiv Râmchandra captured the fort of Halwad in Saînvat 1816 (A.D. 1758) and captured Râja Bâbâhâ, who paid ransom and was released. Mubâriz-al-mulk laid siege to the fort of Vâ dhâvân, which was so reduced by scarcity of water that by the intervention of Chatarsingh, Râja of Nûrvar, an arrangement was come to by which a payment of peshkash or tribute was made in its behalf, so that Râja Arjan Singh remained in safety. In Saṁvat 1862 (A.D. 1805) Bâbâji Sâheb assailed the fort of Vaḍhvân with cannon and besieged it, but marched away disappointed. Fateh Singh Gâikvâd besieged the fort of Lîmbâdî in Saṁvat 1831 [1834], but the Divânji Sâheb Amarji sent an army from Junâgaâdh to the aid of the Râja Harbhâmji, whereupon Râo Sâheb Fateh Sing thought proper to make peace and depart.

In this country there is a great deal of alluvial soil; it produces good jowâri and cotton, but no trees except nim.

Vânkâner is a strong fort on the banks of the Machhu river. Here the Râja Bhârâji Jhâla reigns, who was at first the tilât (or heir to the throne) of Halwâd. When his father died, Tilât Sultânji went out of the town to perform the funeral ceremonies, but his brothers closed the gates and shut him out; accordingly he went to Nagar, and with the aid of the Jâm took possession of Vânkâner, Thân, and 108 villages belonging to Mahyas and Bâbriâs, and thence he ravaged Jhâlâvâd; he was afterwards slain in the battle of Mâthak, but his descendants still reign at Vânkâner. The Râjas of Halwâd and Vânkâner unite in Chandra Singh, the fifteenth ancestor of their line.

This country is mountainous; the temple of Jâdeśvâra Mahâdeva, which has been repaired by the Divânji Sáheb Vithalráo, is a famous one. In the mountains green, white, and black stones are quarried, and the Panchál parganah adjoins them. Jhálavád contains some celebrated temples, among which is that of Šrî Bhîm náth, the Atís whereof are rich and esteemed, and also the temple of Somanáth.*

The total revenue of Jhálavád is 5,00,000 rupees.

On the east of Jhálavád are the parganahs of Pîtád and Baroda, and on the west Morbi and Vânkáner, on the north Dhandhuká and other parganahs and Virangám, and on the south the parganahs of Bhávanagar and Khambálâ.

THE RÁJAS OF JUNÁGAṔH.

An account of Mount Gîrnâr, of the excellencies and blessings of the temples of Šrî Gîrñár, of Bhávanáth, of Mahádeva, of Mrijikunḍá, of Dámódarkunḍá, &c. is given in the Prabhásakaṅkhaṇḍa, which is a portion of the Skanda-puráṇa, a book of great authority among the Hindus. Be it known that the great Rájas of the Solar and of the Lunar race who have passed away are countless:—

Distich:—How many heroes buried under ground
    On earth no vestige of them can be found!

    During the space of 2350 years Jûnâgâdh was governed by Chudâsamâ, i. e. Lunar

* This is Ghelo Somanáth, and not the one near Prabhása Páṭṭan.
Rajputs who were descendants of Sri Sadashiv, and who are said to have come in former times from Sindh, the throne devolving in regular succession to nine men of the name of Naughan, ten of the name of Jakhrā, eleven of the name of Alansingh, and to other individuals with various names, who became Rājas. As no chronicles exist of this dynasty of high lineage, and it would not be worth while to repeat mere tales, only a short account will here be given.

Rāo Dayat and Kuvar Naughan.

A caravan of the Rāja of Gujarāt, whose capital was Pīrān Pāṭṭan, happened to go on pilgrimage to Sri Girnār and Dāmodarakundā, and arrived in Junāgaḍh. It so happened that on this occasion Rāo Dayat expressed his desire to marry the daughter of Rāja Siddha Rāo of Gujarāt, who was extremely beautiful, and wanted her to be surrendered to him in lieu of the tax which was to be levied from the travellers. When the leader of the caravan perceived that there was no other way of getting out of the difficulty than by stratagem, he proposed that permission should be given first to go to Pīrān Pāṭṭan, and then to return for the wedding in due state and with the customary presents. In this manner the Rāja was deceived, and the caravan was allowed to depart.

When they had arrived in their own country, Rāja Siddha Rāo conceived the idea of getting possession of Junâgâdâh and of enjoying the pleasures of Mount Girnâr. Accordingly he took a girl of unparalleled beauty, clothed her in royal garments and placed her in a sumptuous chariot to represent his daughter the princess. She was accompanied by several young men dressed as females to attend upon her, as well as by five hundred carts supposed to be loaded with her dowry, but in reality each containing four valiant armed men. There was also a powerful vanguard preceding the large party, and announcing everywhere its arrival. Dayât, who suspected nothing, was so joyful that he adorned the city, opened his treasury liberally, and went out in great joy to meet his bride, in whose chariot he took his seat; when, however, this train entered the city, the gatekeeper, whose eyes were blind but whose mind was wide awake, exclaimed when he heard the heavy rattle of the carts, “The load of these wagons consists of able-bodied men, and not of tender girls.” When the guards perceived that the secret was revealed, they quickly leaped out of the carts, shouting, “Boys, throw off your female garments! Use your swords; we are not women!” Accordingly they slew Dayât and took possession of the fort of Junâgâdâh.

On that frightful occasion a girl carried Nâungâhan Kûnvar, who was a small boy, to a place called Alidhar, in the pargnah of Kôdînâr, to the house of an Ahir called Devait, who was the Mukaddam or Pâtîl of that place. In course of time certain scouts, glad to foment disturbances, informed the governor left by Siddha Râo at Junâgâdh of this circumstance; accordingly men were despatched from Junâgâdh to take Naughan forcibly away; but, as it is against the Hindu religion to surrender a person who has taken refuge in a house, Devâit preferred to give up his own son, whose head the malefactors immediately cut off, and Devâit exclaimed—

_Hemistiche_ —If me you do not fear, fear God!

When the hard-hearted wretches were informed of their mistake, they shouted for Naughan, but Devâit brought another son, and another, until those butchers had killed all his seven sons; and, to his eternal honour, Devâit preserved the life of Naughan.

_Distich_ —He never dies who his religion keeps;

The moon is shining always in the world.

As it was the will of the omnipotent and most glorious Creator, the universal Benefactor, that the world-illuminating sun of Râja Naughan should rise with a horoscope of felicity, illuminating the world with the conquests and victories of his reign, and imparting eternal glory and freshness to the delightful country of Sindh, and to purge it from the thistles and chaff of rebellion, the executors of the divine commands had preserved his life from this wrathful dust of his cruel foes. In proof of this it may be stated that Devâit had a lovely daughter of tender age, for a long time the playmate of Kuñvar Naughan; they lived with each other as sister and brother. When that girl, whose name was Jâsal, became of age, Devâit made a wedding feast for her on a large scale, but as the grief for his murdered sons was yet deep in his heart he invited all his tribe-fellows the Ahirs, who were extremely numerous, and consulted them on the subject; and they finally came to the determination to invite many of the followers of Siddha Râo and to slay them. Accordingly Devâit went to Junâgaâdh with great ceremony, and induced the Nâib of the Râja, with all the Amirâs and gran-dees of the locality, to come to the wedding feast. The Râja himself was not aware of the proverb that it is folly to trust in the politeness of foes, and that the waves which lick the feet of the wall will overthrow it; accordingly they went; at the time of the repast Devâit caused them to sit in rows, and the Ahirs, at asignal from Râo Naughan, who had also the murder of his own father to deplore, fell upon the guests, all of whom were slain, and became themselves a splendid repast for the crows and vultures, whereas Naughan was carried to Junâgaâdh and placed on the throne in the Saûvat year 874 (A.D. 817).

Naughan conquers Sindh.

There was a great famine in Saûvat 895 (A.D. 838) in the country of Soraâtha, so that many persons died of hunger. The Ahirs, who had much cattle, heard that corn was cheap, and grass as well as water plentiful in Sindh, and went there; and among them also Devāit, with his beautiful daughter Ġāsal, took up his abode in a beautiful fresh, pleasant, and green prairie. According to the hemistich:

The rose’s beauties cannot be concealed.

Ġāsal’s attractions had reached the ears of Hamir Sumrā, who, under pretence of hunting, went quite close to her dwelling.

Distich:—Not sight alone will love beget;
But speech will contribute to bliss.

He beheld a maiden beautiful beyond all description, and in comparison with whom even fairies would be plain-looking.

Verses:—Her form a palm, made by Mercy’s hand;
The charms of grace her head adorned;
Her features Irem’s garden’s samples were,
With various hues of roses blooming;
Her chin so wonderfully beautiful,
Its dimple a well of immortality;
Her waist so slim and thin and accurate;
No one was ever born here beneath
To see her face and not to lose his heart.

At the sight of Ġāsal’s beauty the Sultan of love took possession of the Shah’s heart, and erected the flag of affection towards her in his breast, captivating him like a bird in the lasso of her curls.

The charms of love find entrance through the ear,
They rob the mind of peace, the heart of sense;
But sight makes grow the seed which speech has cast,—

Yes, hearing is but seeing’s seed.
In short, the Shâh's passion was so fervent that he immediately asked for the hand of Jâsal, but the Ahir abhorred the uncongenial union of a Hindu maiden with a Muhammadan, and Hamir Sumrâ became angry.

Distich :— Patience abides not in a lover's heart, Nor water in a sieve.

Accordingly he ordered the guards of the road to allow no one to pass in the direction of Soraṭha; nevertheless Jâsal managed to send the following lines by means of a courier, who was quick as the lightning and rapid as the wind, secretly to her friend Naughan :—

Verses :— "My lord, have pity with my case:
I am in great calamity;
I have no helper thee beside;
Thou wilt distressed persons aid;
My shame and honour do defend;
Show me the road to our own land."

In conclusion, she besought Naughan to protect the honour of his adopted sister, in the same way as Śrî Kṛishṇa had protected Draupadi from her persecutors. As soon as Naughan had received these lines and perused them, he immediately collected an army consisting of Râjputs, Ahirs, Kolîs, Kâthîs, Khânts, Bâbriâs, and Mers in order to punish the godless Sumrâ, and marched by the way of Kachh through Lakhpatnagar to Sindh.

Distich :

His numbers of the army when they took
The coats of mail three lâkhs they found to be.
When the Shâh of Sindh heard from his spies that Râja Naughan was approaching—

Distich:

His tongue he from his mouth protruded;
His breath had missed the way, and fast it stuck.

He coiled himself up like a snake in his rage, and roared like a famished lion, and was impatiently expecting Naughan, who was meanwhile approaching with an army reaching from the boundary of Kaśmîr to the mountains of Mekrân, turbulent like the waves of the ocean, countless in numbers, with fire-vomiting cannon, lightning-throwing guns, blood-shedding muskets, and all sorts of engines. The battle was fought on a fine morning, and the forces of Sumrâ were so arranged that his left flank consisted of Sammâs and Sumrâs, whilst his right consisted of Kâbulîs and Kaśmîrîs; with the van were Mir Behrâm, Ibrâhim Kulikhân, and Jangiz Khân, while Mirza Kuli, A’li Haidar the lord of the Subâh of Peshâwar, and Shâdâdkhân Ghaznavi who kindled the flames of war, were with the centre; whilst on the opposite the foe-breaking Mahârája Sakatsing and Jakatsing Jâdu, Nâg Jeṭwâ and others, with a multitude of Kâṭhîs, such as Harsur Khâchar, and Devsur Wâlâ, and Nâgdân Khumân, and Râo Nunsar and Bahru Lâkâ, and Hirâ Kachhân on the left, and Pâṇḍurang Apâ, and Gaṇpat Râo Nimbalkar, and Bhujang Râo Bhonslâ were placed in the van, and with crowds of Ghâṭîs and others pushed on to meet the foe. When the opposite lines were arranged, a brisk cannonade opened the battle from both sides, followed by musketry fire* according to the Faranghi fashion, which sent many to their eternal rest and brought numberless heads to the ground. Afterwards the mâlée began, in which spears and swords were used promiscuously with darts, clubs, and arrows. The battle lasted from morning till evening, and Sumrâ was put to flight with his Baluchîs, leaving hills of corpses on the field. The Râjputs delivered Jâsal and took her, with all her friends, with many Lohânâs, Bhâtiâs, Khâtîrs, Sarasvâtis, and other Hindu castes, with some Sindhis and Musulmânîs, with their wives and children, whom they established in the country about Junâgaîdh. Chroniclers narrate that so many long-bearded but short-lived Sindhis were slain that a bridge was made of their bodies across the Salt Rân, over which the army passed. Much plunder fell into the hands of the courtiers of the Râja, who obtained also a lâkh of gold ingots from his invasion of Sindh, and used them in building the temple of Petha Devî in Hâlâr, but in lieu of one of them, which the brother-in-law of the Râja had kept back, his own head was inserted in the wall; God, however, knows best. Noghan Râja has passed away and left a good name.

Râja Khengâr, son of Naughan.

Râo Khengâr ascended the throne in Samvat

* The author evidently forgot, when writing this, that firearms were not in use in Naughan's time.
916 (A.D. 859), and marched with a large army intending to raze the fort of Pāṭṭan, in Gujaraṭ, to the ground; as Siddha Rāo happened at that time to be away on some business and at a great distance, Khengār made use of the opportunity to carry off some stones from that fort, wherewith he built the Kālva gate at Junāgadh. To take vengeance for this insult the son of Siddha Rāo afterwards invaded Junāgadh, and Khengār being pursued by his foes the thread of his life was snapped in the vicinity of Bagasara, but Rāṇī Rānik Devḍī, his spouse, was captured, and the Amirs intended to make a present of her to the Mahārāja Siddha Rāo. The Rāṇī, however, endued with a keen sense of modesty peculiar to the innocent, took refuge in the temple of Śankara, lord of the world, situated on the Bhogāvā river and exclaimed,—

Hemistich :—
Thou modesty hast granted, preserve my honour!
All of a sudden the surface of the earth was opened by the will of that Concealer, and she leaped of her own accord into the gap, which thus became her grave.

Distich :—
The bosom of the earth was quickly opened;
She entered, like the soul, the abode of dust.

Another account about Rānik Devḍī is that she was originally the daughter of Rāja Siddha Rāo, and that by the aid of their knowledge of stellar influences astrologers made the statement that she would be married to her own father. This information so distressed the Râja that he exposed the infant girl in a lonely place to become the food of birds of prey. But, as everything decreed by fate must take place, it happened by the providence of God that a potter took the little maiden from the desert, and being much pleased brought her up; afterwards he happened to go to Soraŭha, where he presented her to Râ Khengâr, and informed her that she was the daughter of Râja Siddha Râo, lest she might become imbued with hatred towards her own father, on account of which she afterwards sacrificed her life, which event took place in Saṁvat 952 (A.D. 895).

MULARÂJA AND NAUGHAN.

The reign of Khengâr lasted thirty-six years; his son Mularâja ascended the throne in Saṁvat 952, and reigned thirty-five years and six months. Râja Jakhrâ, son of Mularâja, began to reign in Saṁvat 987, and he reigned for twenty-one years. Râjâ Ganrâj, son of Jakhrâ, became king in Saṁvat 1009, and reigned for thirty-eight years and four months. Râja Mandaika, son of Ganrâj, mounted the throne of Soraŭha in Saṁvat 1047.

FIGHT OF RÂJA MÅNDALIKA WITH MAHMUD GHAZNAVI.

The hateful Sulțân Maḥmûd Ghaznavî marched with an army from Ghaznin to Gujarât with the intention of carrying on a religious war. In Saṃvat 1078 (A.D. 1021, A.H. 414) he demolished the temple of Sri Somanāth and returned. This act so provoked the Mahārāja Mahāalika, who was a protector of his own religion, that he marched with Bhim Deva, the Rāja of Gujarāt, in pursuit:

They ran like fawns and leaped like onagers,
As lightning now, and now outvying wind!

The Muhammadans did not make a great stand, but fled; many of them were slain by Hindu scymitars and prostrated by Rājput war-clubs, and when the sun of the Rāja’s fortune culminated Shāh Maḥmūd took to his heels in dismay and saved his life, but many of his followers, of both sexes, were captured. Turkish, Afgān, and Moghul female prisoners were, if they happened to be virgins, considered pure according to their own belief, and were without any difficulty taken as wives; the bowels of the others, however, were cleansed by means of emetics and purgatives, and the captives were after that disposed of according to the command, "The wicked women to the wicked men, and the good women to the good men" [Qurān, xxiv. 26]; the low females were joined to low men. Respectable men were compelled to shave their beards, and were enrolled among the Shekāvat and the Wādhel tribes of Rājputs; whilst the lower kinds were allotted to the castes of Kolīs, Khānts, Bābriās, and Mērs. All, however, were allowed to retain the wedding and funeral ceremonies current among themselves, and to remain aloof from those of other classes; but God knows best.

During the reign of Maṇḍalika, dharmāśālās, temples, tanks, bridges, and udvas were constructed, and it lasted forty-eight years and two months.

Hamira Deva, Vijayāpāla, Naughan, &c.

Rāja Hamira Deva, the son of Rāja Maṇḍalika, began to reign in Saṃvat 1095; he exercised both justice and equity, and the country prospered more than under his father; he governed it during thirteen years and some days.

Rāja Vijayāpāla, the son of Rāja Hamira Deva, ascended the throne in Saṃvat 1108, and sat on it for fifty-four years and six months.

The reign of Rāja Naughan, son of Rāja Vijayāpāla, began in 1162, and lasted two years.

Rāja Maṇḍalika, the son of Naughan, began to reign in 1184, and died eleven years afterwards.

Rāja Alansingh, the son of Maṇḍalika, commenced to reign in Soraṭha in 1195, and his government lasted fourteen years.

Rāja Dhanesh, the son of Alansingh, became Rāja in the year 1209, and reigned five* years.

Rāja Naughan, son of Naughan, obtained the rāj in 1214, and reigned nine years.

Rāo Khe ngār came to the throne in 1224 (A.D. 1167), and reigned forty-six years.

---

* Some copies have 'nine.'
Rāja Maṇḍalika, son of Rāja Khengār, placed the diadem of rāja-ship on his head in the Samvat year 1270, and reigned twenty-two* years three months and twenty-two days.

Rāja Mahipala, son of Maṇḍalika, began to reign in 1302; he reigned thirty-four† years five months and three days.

Rāja Khengār, the son of Mahipala, began to reign on the 12th Māghasār in Samvat 1336 (A.D. 1279). He conquered eighteen islands such as Div Bhet, Śankhodar, and others, and repaired the temple of Somanāth, which the Musulmān Sulṭāns had destroyed; his reign lasted fifty-four years and thirteen days. During his time Shams Khān arrived, by order of Firūz Shāh, and took Junāgaḍh after a little struggle, whereupon Rāja Khengār took refuge on Mount Girnār, and thus saved his life, but the town was plundered.

Jayasingh.

Jayasingh, son of Rāja Khengār, became Rāja in Samvat 1390, and reigned eleven years eight months and eleven days.

Rāja Mugatsingh, son of Jayasingh, also called Mokalsingh, ascended the throne on the 6th Bhadra in Samvat 1402, and retained it for fourteen years and thirteen days.

Rāja Madhupat, son of Mugatsingh, com-

* Some copies read 'thirty-two.'
† Some copies read 'thirty-four.'
menced to reign on the 4th of Ashvad in Sāṃvat 1412.* He reigned five years one month and six days.

Rāja Maṇḍalika, son of Madhupat, began to reign on the 10th of Kārtika Śūd in Sāṃvat 1421. His reign lasted seventeen years six months and three days.

Rāja Melak, the brother of Maṇḍalika, who was the son of a slave-girl, began his reign in Sāṃvat 1439, and it lasted eleven years eleven months and twenty-four days.

Rāja Jayasingh, the son of Melak, became king in the Sāṃvat year 1468. He reigned for eighteen years three months and fourteen days. He took the fort of Zanjirah (?) from the Musulmāns, who, asking for and obtaining quarter, evacuated the place.

Rāja Kheṅgār bin Jayasingh mounted the throne in Sāṃvat 1486. When the Pādīshāh Aḥmad Gujarātī marched his army to aid the Muhammadan religion and to overthrow the government of Junāgadh, Khēṅgār, the son of Jayasingh, and his Divān, Hira Singh, who was a Nāgar, being unable to resist him, took refuge in the fort of Uparkot, and remained there in safety in Sāṃvat 1470, but eventually they died, and the town was plundered, and Sayyid Kāsam and Sayyid Abul-Khair, who were left with a thānāh to collect the salāmi, bestowed jāgirs on the Muhammadans both in the city and parganahs, and caused them to settle there, and also, with a view of advancing their own religion, they caused Musalmans of the Sindhi, Baluch, and Jat tribes, as well as Khokhars, Maliks, Multanis, Khuraishis, Afgans, and Ghoris to settle there, and made them solemnly promise to shave their beards, and not to kill cows, and keep in their mosques painted or carved figures of the Jalâdhâris and of the Śiva-liṅga, which custom is still observed in those parts. At that time Toghlak Shâh, the Sultan of Dehli, also devastated the town. His reign lasted for twenty years.

* Some copies have S. 1412.

Sultân Mahmud Captures Râja Manḍalika.

He began to reign in Samvat 1489. Kiwamu'l-Mulk, Amir of Sultân Maḥmûd, ravaged the country of Junâgaḍh in Samvat 1520, and in Samvat 1524 took from the Râja his gold umbrella, and after another two years had passed he again ravaged the city and country. Afterwards Sultân Maḥmûd Gujarâti conquered Junâgaḍh at the instigation of a Vâniā named Visal, who was the Kâmdâr of the Râja. The Visal Wâv is a memorial of him. When the Sultân was about to invade Junâgaḍh, he ordered his treasurer to get ready five ḥiros of rupees of ready cash consisting only of gold, the armourer to procure 1700 sword-hilts of Maghrabi, Yamâni, Egyptian, and Khorâsâni manufacture, each weighing from six širs of gold, according to the weight of Gujarát, to four ēirs; again 3300 hilts of Ahmadâbâd made of silver, and of weights varying between four and five ēirs; 1700 large daggers, the hilt of each weighing from 2½ to 3 ēirs of gold; and the chief equerry to get ready 2000 Arab and Turkish horses, and thus equipped he arrived at Junâgaðh and laid siege to the city.

The reason why Visal the Vâniâ instigated Sultân Maılmûd to come with an army was this:—The Vâniâ Visal possessed a wife whose face was like that of a fairy, and whom to see was like beholding a huri; her waist was slim, her brows arched. Her name was Manmohan. One of her glances ens fettered the heart of Râja Maṇḍalika with the chains of her amber ringlets, so that he, captive as he was in the net of her musked curls, having by the tricks of a crafty procuress obtained access to his mistress, fully enjoyed himself with her. When Visal the Vâniâ became aware that his conjugal happiness had been destroyed, he determined to avenge himself, and invited Sultân Maılmûd Gujarâti to invade Junâgaðh. The Sultân, who longed for such news as a fasting man longs for the sound "Allah Akbar," and who was desirous of this wealth which was to be got for nothing, at once marched in that direction with a powerful army. In a short time, by the advice of the base Visal, Râja Maṇḍalika fell captive into the Shâh's hands. During the siege the Sultân bestowed on the sipāhs five krons of gold, besides houses, farms, and dresses of honour, and after the Râja had embraced Islâm he bestowed on him the title of Khân Jahân, and his tomb is in the Mânikchok in the bâzâr of Ahmadâbâd. The fortress of Junâgaâdh fell into the hands of Sulṭân Maḥmud in Saṁvat 1527 (A.D. 1470), and after two years he restored the country to his offspring in jâgîr. And another account of the destruction of the kingdom of the Râos, who are also known by the title of Râizâdahs, is this.

The Story of Mehta Narsi.

The fame of the god-knowing devotee, the walker in the paths of righteousness and abstinence, Mehtâ Sâheb Narsi, the Nâgar, is known from pole to pole, and also the miracles performed by him have spread abroad in all directions. Offended at the ill-humour of his brother's wife, Narsi one day left the house and went to the house of his god, as represented by the temple of Mahâdeva Gopinâth, where he spent several days in fasting, penance, and prayer. At last the ocean of boundless grace was seething, the cloud of divine favour thundering and an invisible angelic herald conveyed these words to the ear of Narsi:—"I have placed the enjoyment of corporal desire and the pleasures of this world at the disposal of the lord Śrî Krishṇa. You shall behold the spectacle of the Râs Mandali, the dancing and the singing of the Gopâs, with your bodily eyes. Put into poetry and declare again what you have seen, in order that those who listen to your songs may obtain eternal salvation.” Narsi Mehtâ complied; since that time nearly 370 years have elapsed, but high and low still sing his hymns, and thus accumulate provision for their final beatitude:—

Hemistiche—The moon is always present in the world!

Narsi Mehtâ was a man destitute of money, and associated with Vairâgîs and Bhaktîs, who tramp about the country; nevertheless when his son Sâmaldâs was celebrating his wedding with the daughter of a Nâgar, Madanji of Vaḍanagar, he miraculously came into the possession of various kinds of chariots, horses with gold ornaments, rich clothes and jewels. Kuvarabâi, the daughter of Narsi Mehtâ, was married to the son of Śrî Ranga Mehtâ, an inhabitant of Únâ (under Junâgaḍh), in Jhaveripûra street. Afterwards Narsi appeared with his two ears and nose in Únâ to attend the ceremony of pregnancy, and said to his daughter, “Ask your mother-in-law to prepare a list of the garments called Mâmerâ in Hindi, that I may make arrangements for obtaining them.” Kuvarabâi replied, with her eyes full of tears, her heart sad, and voice mournful, “In these bad times such a hope is impossible. Such things are at the disposal of wealthy people; be satisfied with having seen me, and depart in peace.” Narsi Mehtâ replied, “Let not your heart be dismayed; the Most High will take care of us, and will not allow us to despair. Get the list quickly, and be not down-hearted." Kuvarabâi obeyed, and a list was mockingly prepared, to realize which would have been beyond the means even of wealthy people. On that occasion Kuvarabâi's father-in-law said, "Let them also write for two make-weight stones of gold, that the wind may not carry away the garments of Narsi Mehtâ." The list made by the mother-in-law was given to Narsi Mehtâ, who prayed to the eternal Benefactor and universal Giver; when, lo, a merchant from the invisible world, whose name was Dâmódar Shet, and his wife Lakhmi Bâi, arrived with several clerks and carts loaded with goods. This man exclaimed, "I am one of the Gumâshtas of Narsi Mehtâ, and having selected from various countries the articles he wanted for the Mâmerâ, have brought them." The people of Śrî Ranga Mehtâ were amazed at what they saw, and at what was coming. The merchants proceeded immediately to open the packages, and to display to those who were present in the assembly more articles than had been written for, together with two golden stones, several suits of clothes, ornaments, and vessels, whereupon all praised the bounty of the universal Giver, and reviled the mockers and unbelievers. The women of the family had prepared water for the purposes of ablution before the repast, which was boiling hot; and as it was not possible to wash without the aid of cold water, which the unbelievers had removed by way of trial, such a rain began to pour, by the liberality of Śankara, that the water of shame was running down the countenances of the members of the family who had played this trick.

Once some jokers induced Narsi Mehtâ to write a hundi for certain Vairāgis, who went with it to Dvārakā, but were, after a great deal of searching, disappointed in their inquiries after the banker to whom the hundi was addressed, and they began to revile Narsi, when, lo, a banker made his appearance, accompanied by two clerks, from the invisible world, and having taken the hundi from the Vairāgis counted out ready money to them.

In spite of beholding so many evident miracles, Rāja Maṇḍalika prohibited Narsi Mehtâ from propagating the Vaishṇava sect; but, not being able to obtain compliance, he convoked a meeting of Sanyâsis, who sever all connections, and utter no other formula except “He is one and has no partner,” as well as of Veda reading Brâhmans, to decide the controversy. The Sanyâsis opened the meeting with the declaration of the unity, the adoration, and praise of the god, who exists from all eternity, and said, “Listen to the words of truth, and abandon the path of Vaishṇava; if you pay not attention to it, you will at last hear what no one has ever heard. Abandon the worship of idols, the playing on musical instruments, singing poems, and the praise of love and beauty, which lead carnal men into error.” Narasí Mehta, however, replied:—

_Distich:_

“Each tribe its way, its faith and Qebla has.
To rosy cheeks my worship I address.

The way of lovers is unknown to angels, then what will be the case with you? O ye wearers of red rags, who retail nonsense, are emaciated by poverty and distress, and who have learnt nothing beyond sitting in deserted places and smearing yourselves with loam, what can you know about the pleasures and ecstasies of image-worship?

_Distich:_

“Reflex of the Friend’s face we see in cups!
O ye who do not know the bliss of wine!

What will these conversations about the Vedânta and arguments from the law avail you against those who are plunged in corporal delights and carnal pleasures?

_Distich:_

“That bitter drink the Sofi wicked calls
More sweetness gives to us than virgins’ kisses.”

By degrees the controversy went beyond mere words, and the disputants caught hold of each other’s throats and hair, and Râja MândaliKa exclaimed, “What profit is there in this useless talk? If Hazrat Dâmodar Râi, whom this Nâgar worships, stone as he is, will take off from his own neck a flower-garland and give it to this Nâgar, we will leave him to his own ways; but if not, he is to be killed." Narsi Mehtā was brought to the idol of Dāmodar Rāî, whom he immediately began fervently to address, in fear of his life and of his honour, but at first ineffectually, because some delay had taken place in the bestowal of the garland. The reason was that Narsi had pledged the Rāg Kedārā, which he was to have sung for Dāmodar Rāî, to the Mehtā Dharianidās in the Qasbā of Talājā for eighty rupees, and therefore could not sing it on the present occasion. The Father of all goodness and succour of the needy was so bountiful as to assume the form of the debtor, i.e. of Mehtā Narsi, and to pay the above-mentioned amount to the creditor, in return for which he received the bond, which he threw from the sky in the presence of the whole meeting, whereupon Narsi Mehtā immediately began to sing the Rāg Kedārā, and obtained the garland of flowers, which the idol put upon Narsi. Some of the revilers became black in the face, whilst others felt their cheeks slapped. Mehtā Narsi obtained the garland in Sānvat 1512, and for the crime of insulting so innocent a worshipper of the god the Mandalika dynasty lost the throne forever.

It is related that a Nāghi Chārani, who was a modest woman, dwelt in the village of Moniyā, in the parganah of Bagasarā and tālukā of Junāgadh, in a virtuous and retired manner. Rāja Mandalika, who had heard of the beauty of her son Nāgājan's wife, betook himself to the chase of that gazelle-eyed maiden. This Chârani girl rose to see the Râja pass, but when he caught sight of the unveiled countenance of that fairy he removed the curtain of modesty from his own heart, and, obeying his lust and passion, attempted to place his hand on her breast, but she guessed his intention, and, turning away her face, cursed him saying, "The bride of your prosperity will turn from you as I do now, and will associate you with Musulmân Pâdishâhs;" and this was the second cause why Mahârâja Mañâdalika lost the throne.

Distich:—

Wherefore attach your heart to this world’s beauty?
Of a thousand bridegrooms the bride she is.

It is said that Jamial the Darvaish,* whose takiya or chapel is on the mountain, was present when this affair of the Nàghi Chârani took place. The duration of his reign was forty years; and for 128 years after Mahârâja Mañâdalika, till the reign of Sultân Akbar, his descendants sometimes prospered and sometimes did not; sometimes they were conquered, at other times they were conquerors and reigned; at last, however, they obtained Chorvâd, Kesod, and other places as jagirs, and became entirely tributary. Their names are here given:—

Râja Bhupat Singh bin Mañâdalika

Became Râja in Saśvat 1529 [1528]. The

* This is Jamial Shâh, whose shrine is on the Dâtâr at Junâgaqâh.
Sultan kept him as a jagirdar at Junagadh, but the Thanahdar on behalf of the Padishah was Tatár Khan bin Zafar Khan, the adopted son of Sultan Muhammad, and he levied the salami (land-tax). The reign of Bhopat Sing lasted 31 years. Mirza Khalil likewise beat the drum of dominion, and founded the place Khalilpur, near Junagadh.

Raja Khengar, son of Raja Bhopat Sing.

He began to reign in Samvat 1560, and his raj lasted 22 years and 4 months; and the Thanahdars of the Padishah were Malik Ayaz and Tatár Khan Ghor, who collected the salami.

Raja Naughan, son of Khengar.

He became Raja in Samvat 1581, and his raj lasted 28 years 11 months and 20 days; Sayyid Kasam and Mujahid Khan Behlim were the Padishahi Thanahdars.

Raja Sri Singh, son of Naughan.

He became Raja in Samvat 1608, and his raj lasted 34 years 1 month and 10 days. Khan Azam Kokaltash, who became the Subahdar of Ahmadabad in place of Khan Khânân, conquered Junagadh in Samvat 1633.

Raja Khengar, son of Sri Singh.

He became Raja in Samvat 1642. In his time Sultan Mahmud and Bahadur Shah Gujarati often came and sojourned at Junagadh. In aid of Sultan Muzaffar Gujarati this Rāja raised confusion in Gujarāt in 1647. That Shāh bestowed Junāgadh in jāgir on Amin Khān, son of Tātār Khān Ghori, Thānāhīdrā of Junāgadh, but he rebelled, whereupon Fateh Khān Shirwâni brought an army on the part of Mirza Khān, son of Bahrām Khān, who had the title of Khān Khāṇân, and plundered the town of Junāgadh in Saṅvat 1633; but Fateh Khān himself died, while Amin Khān remained safe under the protection of the fortress, which was, however, after the death of Fateh Khān, besieged by Khān Khāṇân, who led an army against it and erected batteries, but being unsuccessful he raised the siege and went to beleaguer Māngrol.

Hereupon Amin Khān sallied forth from the fort, and asking aid from Jām Satāsāl marched to give battle; on this Mirza Khān raised the siege, and went forward and ravaged the Koḍinār district, but his elephants were captured and carried off by Jām Satāsāl’s army. Amin Khān bin Tātār Khān, and the untrustworthy Itimād Khān, and the hapless Daulat Khān, had, in spite of their accepting a bribe of two lākhs of Jāms from Sultaṅ Akbar, resolved to join Muzaffār Shāh and Khengār. They now summoned Jām Satājī from Nagar to their aid, and rewarded him with thirty-six villages, as will be related in the chronicles of Nagar. The reign of Khengār lasted for 22 years, and Tātār Khān was for thirteen years the imperial Thānāhīdrā, together with the Chudāsama Rāis.
EDITOR'S NOTE.

Note.—On the Chuđâsamā Dynasty.

The reigns of the first four kings beginning with Navaghana I. extend over 151 years, and then a blank occurs of 22 years between Navaghana II. and his successor Maṇḍalika I. Otherwise the list is pretty consistent, and gains support from the inscription on Mount Girnâr. I give it, corrected by the inscription, for what it is worth, inserting such additions from other sources, and conjectural corrections in the dates, as seem required. These corrections are applied only to the dates when converted into A.D., and where doubtful are marked with a (?)

MS. dates, Probable
Samvat. date, A.D.

904? Ra Dyâs or Dyâchâ, the third in descent from Ra Gâriyo, the grandson of Ra Chuđâchand, and first of the Chuđâsamâs of Junâgaḍh. Ra Dyâs was defeated and slain by the king of Paṭṭan, S. 874 (? 917 A.D.) (Ind. Ant. vol. II. pp. 312ff.) Some copies give S. 874 as the date of Naughan's accession, and allow 42 years for his reign. Tod (Travels, p. 469), counting Chuđâchand as the fortieth prince before his own time, and the eighth before Jâm Unaḍ, whom he places in S. 1110, assumes that Chuđâchand must have lived about S. 960. Very little dependence, however, can be placed on such a computation. He says he was contemporary with Râm Kamâr, the fourteenth prince of Ghumli.

894 937? Navaghana or Naughan, his son,
NOTE ON

Ma. dates, Probable
Samvat. date, A.D.

invaded Sindh and defeated "Hamir," the Sumara prince (S. 890).

916 959? Khangar, his son, killed at Bagasar by the Anhilvada Raja (possibly by Mularaja, who ruled from A.D. 942 to 996, and defeated "Grharipu the Ahir" of Vanthali).

952 968? Mularaja, "son of Khangar" (perhaps of Anhilvada).

1009 992? Navaghana II., his son, "ruled for 38 (18 ?) years."*

1095 1038 Hamir Deva, son of Mandalika, 13 years.

1098 1051 Vijayapala, son of Hamiradeva.

1162 1085? Navaghana III., subdued the Raja of Umet.

— 1107? Khangara II., slain by Siddharaja

* Some copies give—

1047 A.D. Jakhra as successor of Mularaja.

... " Gunaraja (? Kunaraja).

1076 " Mandalika.

Is it possible that these reigns should be arranged thus?

S. 952, A.D. 895 Mularaja, 36 years.

988 931 Jakhra, 21 "

1009 952 Naughan, II. 38 "

1047 990 Guunaraja, 31 "

1078 1021 Mandalika, 17 "

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Reign</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1184</td>
<td>1127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1195</td>
<td>1138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1209</td>
<td>1152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1214</td>
<td>1157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1224</td>
<td>1167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1270</td>
<td>1213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1235</td>
<td>1235?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1302</td>
<td>1245</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1336</td>
<td>1279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1390</td>
<td>1333</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* Amarji omits Naughana after Mandalika, to whom he assigns a reign of 22 years 3½ months, beginning in S. 1270, and then makes Mahipâla's reign begin in S. 1302, leaving 10 years unaccounted for, or about the same time as Navaghana IV. reigned.

† This Jayasimhadeva is mentioned in the Girnâr inscription in such a way as to suggest to Dr. Bühler and Kinloch Forbes that Siddharâja Jayasimha of Gujarât, who slew Râ Khangâra the son of Naughan, in the early RAJA MANDALIKA.

Probable
Saññvat. date, A.D.

1402 1345 Mugatsimha or Mokalasimha, son of Jayasimha, 14 years.

1416 1359 Melak Deva, son of Mugatsimha, saved Jhâla Krishnâji, who sought his protection from the Yavana Muslims.

1421 1371 Mahipaladeva II. or Madhupat, married Kuntâ, daughter of Arjuna the son of Bhumâji. Arjuna was succeeded by Dûdavânish (? Dûda of Sathi).

1439 1376* Mandalika IV., son of Mahipaladeva, defeated Sangana of Okhâ.

part of the twelfth century, is meant. If this were the case, Amârji’s chronology would be useless; — an interval of 200 years would occur between Siddhârâja Jayasimha (d. 1142 A.D.) and his successor Mokalasimha or Mugatsimha 1345 A.D.

* Amârji gives the three successors of Mugatsimha in the order — Madhupat, 5 years (S. 1416-1421); Mandalika, 17½ years (S. 1421-1439); and Melakdeva, his illegitimate brother, 12 years (S. 1439-1450). This he probably derived from an inscription (of S. 1473) at the Revatikûrâta, which gives the genealogy thus: — Mandalika III.; his son Mahipâla; his son Khangâra IV.; his son Jayasimha; his son Mugatsimha; his sons Mandalika and Melak; and Jayasimha, son of Melak. The chronology in the text is confirmed by the Mandalika Kâvya. I have allowed the dates S. 1421 and 1439 to stand, but probably they should be altered to 1423 and 1433.
THE CHUDASAMAS.

MS. dates, Probable
Sanâvat. date, A.D.

1450  1393  Jayasimhadева II. (apparently "the Râï of Jehrend" or "Jiran" mentioned by Firishtah* as defeated by Muzaffar Khân of Gujarât in A.D. 1411). He is said to have taken Zanjirah (Jhinjhira?) from the Muhammadans.

1469  1412  Khangâra V.; war with Ahâmad Shâh.†

1489  1432  Mândalika V. restored the Upar-kot in S. 1507; subdued by Mâhmûd Begarha in A.D. 1469-70.‡

After their subjugation to the Ahmadâbâd kings the dynasty seems to have been preserved as tributary Jâghirdârs for another century; the list of these princes stands thus:—

A.D. 1472, Bhupat, cousin of Mândalika V., 32 years.
„  1503, Khangâra VI., son of Bhupat, 22 years.
„  1524, Naughana VI., son of Khangâra, 25 years.
„  1551, Sri Sinha, 35 years; Gujarât subdued by Akbar.
„  1585, Khangâra VII., till about 1609.

Governors on behalf of the Pâdishâhs of Ahmadâbâd.

Naurang Khân ruled two years, Sayyid Kâsam three years, Bhaya Mandar§ three years.

‡ Ibid. pp. 52-56; the inscription over the gate of the Uparkot is dated S. 1507, but has been badly used by the Muhammadans.
§ Mandan or Mandal according to some editions.
Râja Râisingh, Abdullah Khân one year, and Tâtâr Khân Lodi thirteen years. Isâ Tar Khân became in Samvat 1687 the Mutasaddî of this glorious country, Junâgaḍh, and built the town wall in 1690. The Sayyids, the Kâzîs, the Mo- mans and Bohrâs were introduced by Sulṭân Mahmûd. Isâ Tar Khân governed for ten years, and in his time the English established themselves in Hugli.

Mi[rza] Khurrâm* ruled the first time for three years; Kutb-al-dîn Khân Kâkar one year; Bhovâldâs one year; Kamrân Bêg two years; Abu’l Kâsim one year; Sardâr Khân one year; Mi[rza] Khurrâm for the second time one year; Sâdu’-llah Khâne eight years, Bâgi Khân one year; Jahângir Kuli Khân one year; Behrâm Khân one year; Amir Khân one year; Sâleh Tar Khân two years; Shams Khân and Kutb-al-dîn Khân one year; the Shâhzâdah Murâd Bakhsh two years; Muḥammad Khân one year; Sardâr Khân fifteen years. He was of a noble disposition, and laid out the Sardârbâgh in the west of Junâgaḍh, which contains a harem, a tank, baths, a mosque, an idgâh, and tombs; this garden is the mole of beauty on the countenance of the town. The garden was laid out by Ghori Pir, one of Sardâr Khân’s companions, and for some time—that is, till Samvat 1732—Zâhid Khan was Nâib on the part of Sardâr Khân. The date of the Navâb

---

* Afterwards the emperor Shâh Jahân.
Sardár Khán’s demise [1732] is contained in the words

شَدِ ازِ بَاغ عَالم گلی بی نظیر

“An unparalleled rose departed from the garden of the world.”

If from the words باغ عالم the sum of which is A.H. 1144, the numerical value of گل 50 be subtracted, we obtain A.H. 1094, in which the Sardárbaţh was made, i.e. Saḿvat 1740.

Abel Patan governed three years; Mukim Khán three years; Mirza Khurram for the third time four years; Sad’ullah for the second time four years; Kutb-al-din Khán five years; Diván Sakhânand with Muḥammad Beg five years; Ja’far Khán one year; Sardár Khán two years; Sarbuland Khán one year in Saḿvat 1763; Sherafgan Khán two years; Pirsâheb and Diván Udyarām one year. He became governor in Saḿvat 1764. Sangarām Singh, the Nāib of the Mahārāja Ajitsingh and Diván Pratāpsingh, one year; Navâb Yasîn Khán and Kârbhârī Udyarām one year; Dilâwar Khán and his Kârbhârī Jagatsingh nine months [or three years]; Pir Sâheb for the second time, and the Shâhzâdah’s Divân, and Kâhandâs the Vâniâ for the second time, two years and three months; the Shâhzâdah and Divân Mukbil Khán four years Ma’sum Beg Khán three years and two months;* Jangli Khán one year; Kâzi A’bd-al Hamîd two years; he required every night several women, and took forcible possession of the village of Mendardâ. In this manner during 106 years the governors who came from the Shâhs of Gujarât and Dehli spent their time dishonourably, like owls in a wilderness, and did nothing worthy of record.

* Other copies — “twice, but two years in all.”

Asad Kuli Khân was the Mutasaddi of Junâgaâdh in Samvat 1778, who plundered the country, and he kept also Salâbat Khan Bâbi and Sher Khan Bâbi as his Nâibs; and Sharfu’dîn was his treasurer. In his time Shujaat Khân arrived in this zillâ from Gujarât to collect the peshkash. His government lasted six years.

Ghoulâm Mâhyau’d-din Khân, after the demise of his father, was appointed by the cabinet of Sulṭân Muḥammad Shâh to be Foujdâr of Junâgaâdh, in Samvat 1784; he on his part also made the above-mentioned Salâbat Muḥammad Bâbi his Nâib, who governed personally for a while, and then left his son Sher Khan, sur-named Bâhâdur Khân, as his deputy, and went to Ahmadâbâd. Sher Khân obtained the ijârah or farm of the revenues of Junâgaâdh, for the sum of eighty thousand rupees, from Ghoulâm Mâhyau’d-dîn.

In Samvat 1785 [1789] Mubâriz-al-mulk, sur-named Sarbuland Khân, accompanied by Sher Khân, arrived with an army and took the fort of Mâdhavpur; in this fight Rancho’dâs Nâgar, the Thânahdâr of the Râñâ Vikamátji, was slain after a brave resistance, and the idol of Pârasnâth taken away, but afterwards ransomed for 40,000 Jâmis [kodis]. In Sa miał 1787, Salâbat Muḥammad Bâbi departed this life, and in the same year Sher Khân, surnamed Bahâdur Khân, was removed, and Mir Ismâil was appointed in his stead by Ghulâm Mâhyau’d-dîn; Pilâji Gaikvâd also came the same year with an army to Soraṭh.

In Sa mêvat 1789 Mir Fakhr-al-dîn came with an army to take charge of Junâgaḍh as its Foujdâr, but when he arrived in the plain of Amreli he was met and opposed by Mir Ismâil and his Divân Bhavânidâs, a Vaishnava Nâgar; and in that same zillâ a battle was fought in which Mir Fakhr-al-dîn and Sayyid A’kâli Khân were slain after a heroic battle; their camp was plundered, and Mir Ismâil returned victorious. In the same year Ghulâm Mâhyau’d-dîn died; his government lasted four years.

Nâhr Khân, known as Hazabar Khân, son of Asad Kuli Khân, after the demise of his brother Ghulâm Mâhyau’d-dîn, obtained the sanâd of Junâgaḍh from Muḥammad Shâh, and left Mir Ismâil in his former position. One year after this, the Navâb Sohârâb Khân, at the behest of Mahârâja Ajîtsingh, the Subâh of Ahmadâbâd, ousted Sher Zemân Khân and Dîler Khân from their jâgîr of the port Goghâ, and Mir Ismâil Khân from his post in Junâgaḍh, where, however, he still remained as a private person; but when the Navâb Sohrâb Khân took possession of the city he departed by sea to Thâtâ. Junâgaḍh was taken in the year 1790 of the era of Vikrama.

In Samvat 1792 Sohráb Khán, through Burhán nu’l-mulk, obtained a sanad for Viramgám from the cabinet of the Shâh, and went there with an army, leaving Sâdak ‘Ali Khán in Junâgaðh; but the latter was of so weak a disposition that he allowed robbers to plunder the shops of the bâzâr in broad daylight, and to carry off the people as captives. When Sohráb Khán went from this place, he was prevented from entering Viramgám by Ratan Sing Bhândâri, and by the commander of the troops, Safdar Khán Bâbi, against whom he fought for three days and then lost his life, but his maternal uncle lived in Junâgaðh for some time longer, in poor circumstances.

In Samvat 1793 Hazabar Khán again arrived with a sanad, and Sâdak ‘Ali Khán, being degraded from his position in Junâgaðh, entered the service of the Navâb Momin Khán, whom he aided in besieging Ahmadâbâd; and, as a blood-ransom for Ânupsing, who was slain fighting with Sohráb Khán, his son Bhairavasing obtained the parganah of Upletâ in inám from Ahmadâbâd. In this year Nâdîr Shâh of Iran conquered Muḥammad Shâh and plundered Dehli.

When Hazabar Khán arrived for the second time, he left Mir Dost A’li as his Nâib in Junâgaðh; and the latter, being perplexed how to pay the sipâhâs, sent for Bahâdur Khán Bâbi, who was ruling the port of Goghâ on behalf of the Navâb Momin Khân, and surrendered to him the Subâh of Junâgaôh without any further ado in Saôvat 1794.

_Distich:_

Whatever is decreed must you befall;
Unwilling though you be, force you it will!

As good luck would have it, Hazabar Khân in that very year disappeared like a fox into the obscurity of destruction at Dehli.

Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân Bâbi

Was the son of Salâbat Khân, who was the son of Safdar Khân, who was the son of Jâfar Khân,* who was the son of Sher Khân, the son of Bahâdur Khân Bâbi. As the author was in the service of this family, he conceived it incumbent upon himself to give some account of it.

_Bahâdur Khân Bâbi_ the Afghân was for a long time at the court of the emperor Shâh Jahân, and became a favourite on account of his affable manners, his bravery, and his good family. He was presented with a jâgîr in Gujarât, and when the star of his prosperity began to rise he obtained advancement from the governors and high officials of Ahmadâbâd. He farmed the revenues of the parganahs of Karî, Viramgâm, Bijâpur, and other mahâls several times, sometimes from the Shâhi or imperial Subâdârs, and sometimes from the Sarkârs of the Śrîman â Peshvâ and the Gaîkvâd on his own responsibility; he used also

---

* This is an error of Divân Bânchodji's, as Safdar Khân and Jâfar Khân are the same person.
to precede the army which came from Ahmadâbâd to receive the peshkash or tribute, and to stand security for the payments which the zaminârs of Gujarât and Soraštha had to make; and some time afterwards the Mahârája Ajitsingh, who was appointed to the Subâhârî of Ahmadâbâd, bestowed upon him the the title of Bahâdur, and Sarbuland Khân bestowed on him the title of Khân. In Sañvat 1799 Kumâl-al-din Khân Bâbi was appointed Náib of Ahmadâbâd, first on behalf of Makbûl A'âlam, and afterwards on the part of Fakhir-al-da-ulah (‘Boast of the monarchy’), who was in reality Kharr-al-da ula (‘Ass of the monarchy’); he governed ten years at Ahmadâbâd, and in Sañvat 1810 received the jâgirs of Khedâ, Wâdâsinor, * and Goghà from the Šrimant Sâheb Peshvâ and from the Gaikvâd. From the Sarkâr of the Šrimant Peshvâ and from the Huzûr of Bâlâji Râo and Dâmâji Gaikvâd, when they took possession of Ahmadâbâd, he also obtained the following nine places:—Pirânpaṭṭan, Vaḍnagar, Visalnagar, Munjpur, Tharâd, Kherâlu, Bijâpûr, Sami. In course of time Paṭṭan, Vaḍnagar, Visalnagar, and Bijâpûr were again taken, and Dâmâji Gaikvâd Shamsber Bahâdur besieged Visalnagar for a year and a half till he was able to retake it, at which time Zorâvar Khân was slain, in Sañvat 1819.

Salâbat Muhammad Khân Bâbi died

* Bâdâsinor, in the Rewâ Kânthâ.
in Samvat 1787, and in the same year Bahadur Khan was dismissed from Junaga\dh; in that year also Pilaji Gaikv\ad came with his troops to collect the jama\ bandi or tribute of Sortha, but they remained for two years in Junaga\dh waiting for the payment of the chauth (fourth part of the revenue). By means of the intervention of Raja Vakhatsingh, the brother of the Maharaja, Sher Khan, surnamed Bah\d\ur Khan, was admitted to pay his respects to the Maharaja Ajitsingh, and presented him with an elephant, several horses, money, and dresses of honour, as a naz\ar, and was confirmed in his hereditary j\dgir, and obtained a sanad for the j\dgird\ri of Morbi, the title of Bahadur, earrings, and a yellow flag. In the second year he obtained from the Maharaja Ajitsingh the Founjdarship of the country of Baroda in partnership with Sarbuland Khan; but in course of time he was lucky enough to obtain, without the least trouble, the government of Junag\adh from Mir Dost \'Ali, and then Bahadur Khan afterwards again returned to the country of Gujar\at, where he was duly honoured by the authorities of the period; but, as this recital chiefly concerns the history of Junaga\dh, it is not expedient to give more details about Gujar\at.

In former times Mir Dost \'Ali Khan and Sadak \'Ali Khan were joint rulers of Junaga\dh, but could not manage the affairs of the State; for this reason the ryats and Des\a\is sent Dalpatram, a Gujarati Nag\ar, whom the Nav\\ab Bahadur Khān had formerly brought from Vāḍāsinor to Junāgaḍh, for the purpose of recalling the above-named Navāb from Baroda, which had fallen into the hands of the Gaikvād; accordingly the said Navāb left his son Sardār Khān at Vāḍāsinor (i.e. Bālāsinor) and came to Junāgaḍh. In the same year the adopted son of Umābāī, wife of the Senapati Khānderāo, arrived with an army of twenty thousand men in Soratha for the purpose of collecting the tribute. The Navāb Bahādur Khān brought with him from Baroda Muḥammad 'Ali Khān, 'Abdullah Khān Paṭani, Farid Khān Karānī, and Bulī Khān Yusufzai, Kāmesvara Pant, Karsanchand Bakhshi, Pītambar Modi, and Gulābrāi Nāgar.

In Saṃvat 1802 the army of Pīlājī Gaikvād arrived with the intention of conquering Junāgaḍh, and encamped near the town in a garden called the Tārvāḍi. Navāb Bahādur Khān, seeing no other expedient but to make peace, managed by the stratagems of Mohanlāl Jikār, a Nāgar, who was the Aristotle of the period, and whom he appointed his vakīl for the occasion, to get the army sent off by flattery, and by presenting a nazārānāh of gold and a dress of honour of small value.

In Saṃvat 1803 Kānoji, taking with him Fakhr-al-daulā for a make-believe, besieged the fort of Vānthali, under Junāgaḍh, but departed without having been able to take it; nevertheless Fakhr-al-daulah, by way of boast (ṣakhr), got golden keys prepared, and sent them with a nazaránah of twenty-one ashrafís to the exalted court of the Shâh of Dehli, with the message that they were the keys of the fort, and after this confusion had been quelled the Navâb went to Gujarât.

On the 3rd Chaitra Vad of Saûvat 1804 the Divân Dalpatrâm succeeded in expelling from the town Vasantraí Purbhiâ, who was a foreigner but had obtained a footing in the town by employing a number of Arabs who plundered right and left. After his expulsion he became the companion of the robber Mânsiâ Khânt, and with him and a number of others made a night attack on and captured the fort of Uparkot, which had at that time no chaûkî, and thence these people used to sally out and plunder the whole neighbourhood; these depredations they carried on for thirteen months, but at last departed after a great deal of fighting. About this time also the Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân arrived in Junâgâdh, and two years afterwards Divân Dalpatrâm departed this life. Because his sons were ignorant, Jagannâtha Jhâlâ, a Nâgar who was at first the Peshkâr or manager for Dalpatrâm, and also the Vakîl of the Arabs, carried on his government business also after his demise, with the aid of Sheikh 'Abdulla, who kept possession of the fort of Uparkot. When the latter demanded his arrears of pay, the Navâb Sâheb came to the determination of crushing him;
accordingly he allured Jagannâtha to his party by prospects of gain, and by the promise to appoint him Divân in case he defeated the Arabs. Accordingly, when the Navâb and Jagannâtha proceeded with the army to Kâthiâvâd to collect the jama’bandi tax, Rudráji, the brother of Jagannâtha, managed to carry away from the fort of Uparkot the gunpowder and ammunition the Arabs trusted to in case of war, on pretence that it was old and useless for that purpose, and that therefore it ought to be sold and a fresh store bought in lieu of it; then he sent information to the army, and when the whole world was lulled to sleep in the citadel of darkness the Navâb Sâheb left the camp with Jagannâtha, entered the town, approached the Uparkot, laid siege to it, and caused the Arabs outside [of the Navâb's party] to place ladders against the wall, dig a mine, and attack the Arabs who were within the fort, and after some fighting a compromise was made with Sheikh A'bdulla Zubaidi and others by pledging the village of Dhorâji to Jâdejâ Kumbhâji of Gondal and obtaining money from him, which being paid to the Arabs they departed from the town in Saṃvat 1810, but the Navâb Bahâdur Khân died on the 25th of the month Bhûdaravâ in Saṃvat 1814, after having reigned thirty-six years in Junâgaâh, reckoning from the beginning of his appointment as the Naib of Asad ('Ali) Kulî Khân and of Ghulâm Mâhyau’d-dîn Khân.
When the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khan, after the demise of his father, perceived that the Divân Jagannâtha Jhâlâ, who had accumulated some property, and acted according to his own will in everything, he was displeased, and had him assassinated in the night by a negro slave or the name of Ballâl, near the Manjavâdi gate, where the Gaikvâd’s army was encamped, and where Jagannâtha was staying in a tent to keep an eye on the chaubâ. After that, his house was attacked, and at the instance of Jâdejâ Kumbhâji, Jamadâr Radvi Khân Rehên Dholkiyâh, and of Sayyid Khalafshâh, who offered themselves as bail, his brother Rudrâji was allowed to depart safely to Purbedandar with the family and property, and did not return to his country until a long time afterwards, through the intervention of the Divânji Sâheb Amarji, and on paying a small amount of money as nazârânah. After that Somji Jikâr became Divân, and after him Dayâl the Vâniâ, and again Somji Jikâr; but they were not liked, and obtained no firm footing.

In Saâmvat 1810 the news arrived that the fort of the bandar of Surât had been taken from Ahmad Khân and Sidi Masu’d by Captain Austin Shore under the command of General Butcher, and also that the English had by force occupied and taken from Surâju’d-daulâ a portion of Orissâ, the Subâh of Bihâr, and the Subâh of Bengal; and from Asaftu’d-daulâ, governor of Oudh, the zillâ of Banâras or Kââsi; lastly, that Shâh A’âlam had bestowed the title of Divân on the English Sarkâr.

In Samvat 1818 Aḥmad Shâh Abd’ali fought with an innumerable army of Marâthâs and defeated it.* The total amount slain was nearly two lâkhs, and among the killed were many Sardârs of Holkar, Sindhiâ, the Bhonslâ, and of the Gaik-vâd. Some fled and some were made prisoners; the latter met their death by being blown from cannon, and consisted not only of men, but also of females and children.

Captivity of the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân.

In Samvat 1818 the Jamadâr of the Arabs, Bâsalmân by name, imprisoned the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân in the Uparkot, with the consent of the Bibî Sâhebah Sulṭân (the wife of the Navâb Bahâdur Khânji), and made Muzaffar Khân bin Jâfar Khân Navâb of Junâgâdh. When the Navâb Kamâlu’d-dîn Khân, who was the uncle of Mahâbat Khan, heard of this, he brought an army from Pirân Pâṭân under the pretence of liberating him, but in reality to give Junâgâdh, in case he should be able to get it, to his own son Ghâzi-al-dîn Khân, and to convey Mahâbat Khân to Radhanpur. Accordingly he brought his troops during the night under the fort walls, which they attempted to scale by means of ladders; but by the watchfulness of the chaukidârs, and the good fortune of the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân, being unable to effect an entrance, and when the sun at dawn, the world’s illuminating commander-in-chief, popped out his head from the citadel of the azure sky, the soldiers were put to flight and retired with shame. When Sadâśiv Pâṇḍâ Nâgar, uncle of the author, was made aware of this futile attempt of Kamâlu’d-din Khân, he became cooler in his partizanship, and the Navâb Kamâlu’d-din, seeing himself discomfited, beat the drum of departure in his disappointment.

* The great battle of Panipat.

After the army had marched about two stages from Junâgaḍh, Kumbhâji Jâdejâ and other Zamindârs, through the intervention of Šivâdâs Pâṇḍâ, made an arrangement with Sulîmân the Jama’dâr, so that he released the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân from captivity, and the following arrangements were made:—The two brothers Muzaffâr Khân and Faithyâb Khân obtained the jâgir of Rãnpur and Dhandhusar with eighty-four villages as an inâm on their abandonment of all claims to participate in the râj. The parganah Upletâ was [for the sum of 35,000 Jâmîs (koðîs) given as a bribe to the agents] bestowed upon Kumbhâji for a yearly peshkash of 5000 Jâmîs (koðîs). During two years Dayâl the Vâniâ became Kârbhâri twice, and was also removed twice.

The Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khânji used to plunder the surrounding country of Kâthiâvâd in order to maintain himself and to pay his troops; in several talukâs he collected a variable jama'bandî illegally. When he was pressed to pay his army, he used to flee with a select party of friends to the town under the shelter of night, to which he was tracked by the helpless sipûhîs, who were in a destitute condition from not having received any pay; but he generally expelled them with threats and by force from the town, in order to relieve them from the trouble of wandering about and from the misery of service, and to compel them to return to their homes, where they might take rest with their children; this went on until Mevalâl bin Jagjivândâs bin Sadâna and, a Kâyâth from Gujarât, became Divân, who, like his brother Śivalâl, used to make a living as a munshi. He was a man who wrote a pleasing hand, had agreeable manners, and dressed well; and about this time Sher-zamân Khân Bâbi, the uncle of the Navâb Sâheb, who had formerly been expelled by Sohrâb Khân from Goghâ, and who had been reinstalled there and had come to Junâgâdî and received in jâgîr from the Navâb Sâheb the eighty-four villages of the Bânâtvâ parganah, carried on the business of Kârbhâri for about two years.

Shekh Miyân takes Verâval.

S u l tân Bibî, sister of Navâb Bahâdur Khân, and spouse of Shahâmat Khân Bâbi, who had taken possession of Verâval, was forcibly deprived thereof by Kâzi Sheikh Miyân and by Mâlik Shahâb-al-din, and Sheikh Miyân ruled there with entire authority, and concluded a covenant of peace and friendship with Desâi Sundarji and other Nâgars.

The Divânship of Divânji Sâheb Amarji.

At the age of eighteen years Amârji left Mângrol and went in search of service to the court of the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khânji, who was at that time besieging the fort of Uparkot, where the Arabs had taken refuge. The Navâb Sâheb said to Amârji, "If you could obtain possession of the Vâgeśvari gate, which is in the possession of the Arabs of the fort, and could surrender it to the officials of the Sarkâr, you would establish a claim to enter my service." Accordingly he went to Purbandar, whence he brought an Arab Jamadâr named Sâlmân with a number of other Arabs, but as the Navâb Sâheb would not allow them to enter the town they remained outside, but assaulted the Vâgeśvari gate in the night, slew some of its defenders, and finally handed it over to the servants of the Navâb Sâheb, whereupon the entire party was engaged to remain at the court, and they discharged well and ably whatever service was entrusted to them. Two years had not yet elapsed when the Divânji Sâheb conceived the idea of subjugating Verâval. Keeping a portion of the army with the Navâb Sâheb at Âdri, two kos from Verâval, Amârji, when the moon with her army of stars was ascending by means of the scaling ladders of degrees to the citadel of the firmament, proceeded to Verâval in the company of the Jamadâr, 'Abdu'llâ Khân, and others, and planted their standard on the wall on the west of the town, and fell on the garrison suddenly like a calamity from heaven, and made them food for the sword. After that they attacked four or five hundred Arabs who were in the thânâh, whom they put to flight; then Jamadâr Wâhdiu'd-dîn entered the town with a detachment of Sindhis from the seaside, and great bloodshed took place, so that the conquered party lost heart, and, not caring for their honour, fled with Shekh Jahângir and Shekh Miân, and arrived safely at Pâ'tân Div, but Sundarji Desât with his adherents was captured. In the morning the news of the conquest of the fort was conveyed to the Navâb Sâheb, who entered it with the joyful sounds of the kettle-drum, and the populace came out to welcome him. On this occasion Divânji Sâheb, the deceased Amarji, father of the author, succeeded in preserving the honour of the ladies of Sundarji Desât from the Navâb Sâheb, who was addicted to pleasure. The Divânji Sâheb was not employed in the (mualî) revenue and judicial branch, but merely superintended the (faujdâri) army administration of the state. According to the freaks of the times, Poppa Pârikh was Divân for three days, Jhavarchand for twenty days, and Mulchand Pârikh for one month, and their management was so confused and ruinous that they abandoned it in disgrace.
SHER ZAMÂN KHÂN ATTACKS JUNÂGAÎH.

In Šaṃvat 1825 Sher Zamân Khân arrived from Bântwâ, with the vague intention of effecting a night surprise, with a company of vagabonds from the wilderness of misfortune, and took up a position in the Basârat Bâgh (a garden near the Majhâvâdî gate). In the morning, when the portal of light was opened, and also the town gate was to be unlocked, these vagabonds quickly approached it, and suddenly met the woodcutters and other inhabitants of the country, who were arriving on a pilgrimage to Pir Dâvalshâh, who is called Maidani; and when they reached the gate, it was shut upon them from within, and the people commenced to fight with them, whereupon Sher Zamân Khân fled like a gazelle and leaped like a hare, from terror and fright, in the direction of his own abode.

DEMOLITION OF DILKHÂNIĀ.

In the same year the Kâthi Kumpâ Wâlâ asked for the Divânji’s assistance and induced him to demolish Dilkhâniā; and the said place, which was an asylum of highway robbers, was razed to the ground by the Divânji Sâheb Amarji, accompanied by the above-named Kâthi Kumpâ Wâlâ, who was a Grâsia of Chitalgâm.

ACQUISITION OF KUTIÂNA FORT.

The troops of the Divân Sâheb were still in the zillâ of Dilkhâniā when Pir Khân Shirvâni, Bhâvata, Khokhar, and other Kasbatis represented to him that they had made over the fort of Kutian to Hashim Khan Babi, a young son of the Navab Saheb Bahadur Khan, and that he was severely oppressing the inhabitants of the country; and that if he should perchance be wheedled into parting with the fort to Rana Sultani, whose Kamdar, Premaji Lohan [Thakar] would be ready enough to buy strange property, it would be a difficult matter [to retake it].

Distich:—A pin can stop the water at its source;
           When full, no elephants can pass it then.

As soon as he obtained this information the Divan immediately marched to Kutian, where he began to carry on all the operations proper in a siege, and soon made use of mines, by which he blew a bastion into the air, which destroyed likewise all the chaukidar's of the garrison. Hashim Khan, being thus rendered helpless, sued for peace, which was soon concluded; he lost the fort, but obtained in lieu thereof the village of Majhavadi as a jaghir. When the Divan conquered the fort he installed therein his younger brother Govindji [in behalf of the Navab], who remained there till his death in Samvat 1846, after which his son Mangalji kept it till Samvat 1849. Having terminated this affair, the Divan again unfurled his banners, to proceed on the Mulukgiri expedition.

Conquest of the Fort of Talaja.

Vakhatsing Raval, Raja of Bhunagar, called to his aid the Divan, who being aware that it is the duty of governors to cherish their subjects, responded to the call, and when he arrived at Goghā, Vakhat Sing requested him to reduce the fort of Tālājā. Accordingly he marched in person with his soldiers, who succeeded in scaling the wall of the fort; their antagonists, the Kolis, however, met them bravely, and severe fighting continued for some time, during which there was much bloodshed, and the Divānji himself was wounded in the leg by a musket-ball; but fortune favoured his party, their opponents were unable longer to resist, and were compelled to pay a large nazarānah. In course of time the fort came into the hands of the English, who gave it to Navāb Nur-al-dīn, the governor of Kham bhāt, who in his turn sold it to Rāval Vakhat Sing, ruler of Bhavnagar, for 80,000 rupees. The Divānji Sāheb then returned to Junāga dh, but, in spite of the station he had attained, he did not desire to be addressed by the title of Divān; on this occasion, however, on the day of his bathing on recovery he was presented with the presents bestowed on a Divān, viz., a palanquin, a big drum, sword, dagger with golden hilt, chobdār, torches, and the other insignia.

Conquest of Four Forts of Māngrol.

As Shēkh Mi yān of Māngrol excited a rebellion and would not submit, the victorious standards of the Divānji proceeded against him in Saṁvat 1827, and the forts of Sīl, Divāsā, Mahâri, and Bagasrâ were forcibly taken from him. In the battle which was fought under the fort of Sîl the horse ridden by the Divânji received no less than eleven wounds; but he himself, by the hand of the true Preserver, was kept from all harm. After chastising the Thânahdârs, the Divânji besieged Mângrol, but when the firing of his cannon began to take effect, Shekh Miyân lost heart, and despatched Jibhâi, the paternal uncle of the Divânji Sâheb, to intercede for him; thus he obtained pardon after surrendering the moiety of his parganah [to the Navâb]. During the same year that mine of virtues Ku vârjî,—mercy be upon him,—the father of the Divânji Sâheb Âmarji, after becoming a Sanyâsi (or Brâhmaṇ ascetic) became an inmate of Paradise.

Liberation of the Mutasadis of Kachh Bhuj.

The Râo Sâheb Gôjî had surrendered his Mutasadis (darbâr officials) as securities to the custody of the Arab and other Jamâdârs, whose salaries he was unable to pay; but, as the delay was long, the Arabs, after exposing them to innumerable calamities, brought them to the district of Hâlâr. Their Jamâdâr, who was an honourable man, was so greatly distressed at their insubordination that he put on his coat of mail and threw himself into the river Aji. When the Divânji Sâheb, who was at that time collecting peshkash (tribute) in this zillah heard of it, he, for the sake of the honour of the Râo Sâheb, paid the debt, and released the Mutasadis. In return for this handsome act the Rāo Sāheb for some time used to send the Divānjī Sāheb all sorts of presents and gifts.

Punishment of the Vāghars and Māliās.

Crowds of Vāghars were in the frequent habit of attacking the troops of the Šrimant Peshvā, of the Gāekvāḍ, and of the Jām, of spiking the cannon with iron nails, and of plundering the regions of Hāllār, Jhālāvāḍ [and Kachh]; accordingly the Divānjī reduced them to obedience after some fighting, and caused them to pay a fine.

Punishment of the Bābriās and of the Unā Qasbātīs.

The Bābriās, who subsist on impure food, were sallying forth from the shelter of their thorn-bushes and hills to commit depredations in the villages of Nāgher, Kāthiāvāḍ, and Wālāk. The army was sent against them; they stood the first shock, but

Distich:—An antelope which with a lion plays
Will soon the earth touch with its face.

They were soon ground to powder by the hoofs of the steeds of the victorious army, and compelled to cease from their deeds of rapine, and obliged to restore the plunder they had taken, and they moreover agreed to pay a yearly tribute. When the troops marched back, they passed through the town of Unâ, and the Qasbâtis of the place, confiding in the strength of their foot and the bravery of their men, attacked the artillery train, and Poi, the nephew of the author, who was in charge thereof, honourably sacrificed his life to preserve the train; and after hard fighting the people consented to pay a fine, and, as a security for the disbursement of it, the Divânji Sâheb carried off the son of Qasbâti Shekh Tâhir to Junâgaḍh.

Kumbhâji attacks the Divânji Sâheb.

Jâdêjad Kumbhâji of Gondal trusted much in his wealth and his Râjputs, and entertained for some time evil designs against Junâgaḍh. Accordingly when the Divânji Sâheb had left the troops to guard the frontiers and had himself returned to Junâgaḍh, Kumbhâji called the Marâthâ army of the Gâekvâd to his aid, and also privately consulted the Navâb Sâheb of Junâgaḍh, who entertained at that time a little spite against the authority of the Divânji, the breaking down of which, he conceived, would increase his own; wherefore he considered this a good opportunity, and connived with Kumbhâji, who was now encamped at Málas hamdi, a village four miles from Junâgaḍh, and was only waiting for any encouragement (from the Navâb) as an excuse for ruining the Divân, attacked the army, which fled; but Jamâdar Salmin, not being able to mount a horse, was captured by the Marâthâs, who, however, released him without injury. When the fugitives arrived in Junāgaḍh the Navāb Sâheb loaded them with reproaches, but the Divânji Sâheb marched with an army numerous as locusts, and pitched his camp opposite to that of the confederates. Kumbhâji now repented, separated from Bâmanioji, who was the instigator of this evil action, and agreed to pay a fine and to restore all the plunder he had taken. When peace was restored, the Divânji Sâheb, on his return, besieged the fort of Châtâsah; and Bâmanioji, its proprietor, after paying a large fine in cash and in kind, again took the ring of obedience to Junāgaḍh into his ear.

Imprisonment of the Divânji Sâheb with his brothers, and murder of Jamâdâr Sâlmin the Arab.

Certain conspirators, such as Bhim Khojah the vegetable seller, Gulâbrâî Mehta, Khushâl Râî, Magâtrâm Bhagat, Jagjivan Kikani, and other Nagars, caused the Divânji Sâheb Amârji, with his brothers Dulabji and Govindji, to be cast into prison. The Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân, owing to the statements of those calumniators, was displeased; nevertheless he secretly honoured the prisoners by his visits and consoled them. On the fourth day of Phâlgun in Sânvat 1829 the three persons just mentioned were imprisoned, and on the same day Sâlmin the Jamâdâr, their adherent, was summoned to the Rang Mahâl (court), under the pretence that as Sheik Miyân of Mângrol had taken possession of the fort of Nâvî, in the parganah of Porbandar, and was plundering the parganahs Chorvâd and Kesoji, his services were required to repel these attacks. When he entered the door, slaves jumped from an ambush and slew him, but his follower Sayyid 'Ali Châvush was quick enough to save his own life by striking out right and left at the slaves of the Sarkâr, and escaped. This same Châvush rose in course of time at Baroda to the dignity of a "sitter on an elephant," but was at last trampled to death by being tied to the feet of one. The Divânji Sâheb was set at liberty on the 7th of Srâvana Vad, after a captivity of five months and three days, on the condition of paying a nazaránah of 40,000 Jâmi kodi, and until the payment thereof his eldest son, Raghu-nâthji, then ten years old, remained as a hostage; the Divânji himself, however, with his family, relatives, and followers, departed to the town of Jetpur.

THE NAVÂB SÂHEB MARCHES AGAINST MÂNGROL, AND RECALLS THE DIVÂNJI SÂHEB.

As Sheik Miyân was ravaging the country with a numerous army, and carrying off men and beasts, the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân marched against him, but, being unable to cope with his foe, he encamped at a distance of seven kos from the town and spent his time in reconnoitring. He kept the Divân Raghunâthji at his court, and entrusted his education to Bibâ Sardâr Bakhtâ (his favourite wife), the daughter of Kumâh-al-dîn Khân, who treated the boy like a mother, and who likewise accompanied the Navâb. In course of time Sheik Miyân became so bold that he not only stole horses and camels, but also harassed the army itself, so that no one dared to go out of the camp; and the Navâb, being thus greatly pressed, called Bhim Khojah and the other calumniators into his presence, and addressed them as follows:—“The Divân Amarji, the like of whom no potentate ever had in his service, and who augmented the honour of the Darbâr.
of Junâgaâd, was by you removed from office without any fault of his own, and is at present living at Jetpur. He has received invitations from Kumbhâji of Gondal, from Râval Vakhtsinghji of Bhârnagar, from Kâthis Bhoka and Kânthâd of Jetpur, from Rânâ Sultânji of Porbandar, from Meroji of Râjpurâ, from Lâkhâji of Râjkot, from Hothâji of Kotrâ, from Jâm Jasâji of Navânagar, from Bhrâji Jhâlâ of Wânkâner, from Wâghji of Morbi, from Šeshâji of Sâelâ, from Râj Gajîsinghji of Dhrângdhrâ, from Jhâlâ Harbhamji of Limbâ, from Jasâ Koli of Mahuwa, from Sheikh Miyân of Mângrol, from Râizâdâh Singhji of Chovâd, from Daghoji Râizâdâh of Kesoj, from Mukhtâr Khân and Aâdil Khân of Bântwâ, from Muzaffar Khân Bâbi and Fathyab Khân of Rânpûr, from Sheikh Tahir of Unâ, from Sayyid Latif of Delvâdâ, from the Faranghi Lewis Jhujhu of Divbandar, from Sidi Yaqub of Muzaffarâbâd, from Râo Sâheb Godji of Bhuj, from Lalubhâi of Bharuch, from the Navâb of Bandar Surat, and from Momin Khân of Kham-bhât, all of whom have sent him letters upon letters, presents in money, and kind messages with many compliments, and though he has no need of me, yet without him the state of Junâgaôh is daily getting worse; if, therefore, you love your lives, you must obey the Divânji Sâheb and immediately recall him.” Having obtained the orders of the Navâb Sâheb, those ill-natured men feigned repentance for what they had done, and gladly went to Jetpur, where they fell down at the blessed feet of the Divân Sâheb.

On the same occasion it happened that agents of the Râo Sâheb Godji had arrived with rich dresses of honour and splendid gifts and an invitation to the Divânji Sâheb to become the Divân of Kachh; they had been there for several days, but he gave them leave to depart, and thought proper to remember his old service and his duty of assisting the Navâb in this emergency. Accordingly he immediately joined the Navâb Sâheb, who restored to him the Divân Raghu-nâthji hitherto kept as a hostage, with a handsome present, and assigned to him the revenues of two villages for his private expenses. As soon as Sheikh Miyân heard of the arrival of the Divânji Sâheb, in spite of his bravery his heart failed him and he made his appearance with hands bound returned the property he had taken, paid a fine, and again became a vassal of Junágađh.

Conquest of Sutrāpāḍa.

When the army departed from Mángrol, the rayats of the parganah of Pātān complained that Chând Pátani, the Zamindâr of Sutrâpādâ, had reduced them to the last extremity of destitution. After hearing this complaint, the world-conquering banners of the Divânji Sâheb were unfurled; he besieged the fort, and the gunners kept up continual firing during a month, whereupon Chand came out with a grieved heart and a yellow face, suing for pardon, and having obtained a guarantee of his life and honour from the Divânji Sâheb, surrendered the fort to Mehta Gangârâm Lâlâbhâi, son of the Divânji’s aunt.

Chând Pátani had a virgin daughter, handsome like the brilliant moon, and as the Navâb Sâheb heard of her beauty, he dropped the reins of patience from his hands and desired to procure an interview with her; but as Chand refused to comply, he sent some persons to bring her by force. But the Divânji Sâheb kept his word, by which the honour and life of Chand were guaranteed, and accordingly he and his beautiful daughter were allowed to depart to Gorakhmaḍ, which is a sacred place of the Jogis.

Conquest of the Fort of Positrâ.

Mérâman Khâvás, the Kârbhâri of the Jâm Sâheb Jesâji, was greatly distressed by the depredations of Wâghars of Okhâmandal, accordingly he invited the Divânji Sâheb in Samvat 1830 to reduce the fort of Positrâ. The noble-minded Divânji Sâheb, who was constantly on the outlook for similar events, arrived in a short time in Okhâ and engaged in the siege of Positrâ, a fort never conquered by any one, but taken by the good fortune of the Divânji Sâheb in a single assault after exploding a gunpowder mine, and then mounting the breach. An amount of plunder considerable beyond all expectation was found, which those pirates had collected in the ports of the Dakhan, of Arabia, the Soahili coast, Maskât, Abyssinia, Sindh, and the Farang (Portuguese) settlements. On that occasion the doleful news arrived of the demise of the Navâb Sâheb Mahâbat Khân on the 14th Kartak Vad in Samvat 1831 [A.H. 1177]. The duration of his reign was 16 years 2 months and 2 days.

Navâb Sâheb Hâmed Khan, son of Mahâbat Khân Bahâdur Bâbi.

After receiving this terrible news the Divânji Sâheb immediately left Okhâ, marched quickly to Junâgaâd, and placed the Sâhib Zâdah of exalted fortune Hamid Kân, who was born of Sujân Kuñvar, upon the masnad of his father, and started the army to collect the jamâbandi. In that year also the peshkash (tribute) for Jhâlâvâd was for the first time fixed. Whilst the army was at a distance, collecting peshkash, Bâbis Adil Khân and Mukhtâr Khân, the Jâgirdâra of Bāṅtwā, formed an alliance with the Nāgoris and other Kasbātis of the town of Vānthali, and without difficulty took that fort. When this disastrous news reached the Divānji Sāheb, he quickly marched to Vanthali and beleaguered the fort on all sides. Most of the instigators of this rebellion now tried to divert the Bāi Sāhibah Sujānbāi from the path of her duty, and to bias her towards Mukhtār Khān and Ādil Khān; and at this time, Āburāī Mahipāṭrāo, the Subāh of A’ḥmadābād, happened to bring an army into the country to collect peshkash, and the malcontents bought his aid, but, owing to their fear of the Divānji Sāheb, they were unable to effect anything, and he kept up the siege and skirmished with the troops who approached his army. And when the Dakhanīs perceived that they were unable to effect anything, they made peace with the Divānji and presented him with a dress of honour, and abstained from fighting, and entrusted to him the collection of the rest of their jamābdānī and returned. After getting rid of this interference the Divānji Sāheb pressed the fort more closely, so that Mukhtār Khān sued for mercy, and was allowed to depart to Bāṅtwā, and the fort was occupied by the servants of the Navāb of Junāgadh.

Victory over the Subahdars of the Peshvā and Gāekvād.

Amrat Rāo and Thobān, Subahdars of the Peshvā and the Gāekvād, arrived together whilst the army of the Divânji Sâheb was in the Panchâl district. These troops advanced with the intention of fighting under their valiant officers. The Divânji Sâheb, as then seemed best to him, and remembering his position as a Zamindâr, suffered them to be without molestation, but both the antagonistic armies were close to each other at Jetpur, and the warriors were anxious to fight. Accordingly at dawn, when the sovereign of day drew forth the scimitar of light from the scabbard of darkness, the command to attack was sounded on both sides by beating drums and blowing clarions noisy enough to cause an earthquake. The Dakhânis rushed forth with great ardour in large masses, carrying swords, guns, and lances, compelling the Divânji, who put his trust in the Lord of Gîrnâr, to defend himself with his infantry and cavalry and to open fire with his artillery. At last the fight became general, and in it a trooper wearing a coat of mail inflicted a blow with his sword on the shoulder of the Divânji Sâheb, which would have killed him had it not been rendered harmless by the armour he wore, and, turning swiftly round, at one spear-thrust he slew the trooper. The enemy left their dead on the battle-field and carried off their wounded; and, the Divânji Sâheb being victorious, the Marâṭhâs began the second day to treat for peace, and a meeting having been held, through the mediation of Jâdejâ Kumbhoji and Wâlâ Kânthar, peace was finally concluded, with many compliments on both sides; when, however, Amrat Rão arrived in Ahmadâbâd, he was treacherously killed in the bazar by an Arab.

March to Pâlanswâ, in the Country of Vâgad.

At the request of Vâghji Râjâ of Morbi, the Divânji marched to Vâgaḍ, but some of his men died for want of water whilst crossing the Salt Ran; but the fort of Pâlanswâ and the town of Keriânagar were taken after considerable trouble, and countless booty fell into the Divânji’s hands, and he returned to Junâgaḍh after receiving a large sum of money sent by the Rão Sâheb of Kachh to avert further misfortunes.

As the Jâm Sâheb Jasâji was besieging the fort of Bethâli, in the parganah of Porbandar, Rânâ Sultânji sued for assistance, as narrated in the account of that parganah, and it was granted. Peace was concluded, on condition that the fort of Bethâli should be demolished. On this occasion an attempt was made by Merâman Khwâs secretly to poison the Divânji Sâheb at an entertainment to which he was invited. But, as he was destined to live, he excused himself from accepting the invitation, on the pretext that Daftari Khushâlrâi had died at Junâgaḍh; and he ordered his army to march in that direction. Jivâji Sâmraj, Subah of the Gaikvâd, had come to collect the peshkash (tribute) of Kâthiavâd, and, having stationed his army at Amreli, aimed at independence and the conquest of territory and caused much disturbance in the country. Accordingly the victorious army marched to coerce him, and after he was defeated in open battle he took shelter in Amreli, which place he was also forced to quit; the Divân Sâheb granted him pardon, and allowed him to depart to Gujarât, and razed the fort to the ground. At this time Sheikh Miyân caused a disturbance in Mângrol, and the Divân Sâheb Amarji sent his younger brother Divân Dulabhji, who was a pillar of the government and wise like Aristotle, to punish him, and he took up his station at Sîl, where hostilities were being carried on with equal results, when, by the will of God, Khusâlbâi, mother of the author, and daughter of Dosâ Mehta Mânkad, expired on the 13th of Jeshtâ Vad in Saṁvat 1834 (A.D. 1777). She had given birth to three sons, the eldest of whom, Raghu Nath, was born on the 11th of Asâd Shud Saṁvat 1819 (A.D. 1762); the second, Ranchodji, was born on the 10th Aso Shud in Saṁvat 1824 (A.D. 1767); and the third, Dalpatram, on the 2nd Bhâdarvâ Vad in Saṁvat 1829 (A.D. 1772); her fourth child was a daughter Asabâi, who was born in Saṁvat 1832 (A.D. 1775). Sheikh Miyân thought this a good opportunity, and came on the pretence of condolence to Junâgaḍh, and sat down with some of his companions in the large tent where the mourners were assembled, and sued for pardon, which the Divân Sâheb was thus obliged to grant.

At the close of Saṅvat 1834 the Râo Sâheb Fatehsing Gaikvâd, who reigned at Baroda, and who had heard of the expulsion of Jiwâji Sâmraj from the fort of Amreli, entered Sorâth with a large army; when he arrived at J e t p u r and encamped there, he heard how well the Divân Sâheb stood with his army, how liberal and how brave he was, and he saw that it would be a difficult matter to subdue him: accordingly through the mediation of some of the Zamindârs, he overlooked his injury, and presented the Divânji Sâheb with a dress of honour, and also bestowed on him the tribute which was in arrears, and returned. In Saṅvat 1835 the Gâekvâd went again on mulkgiri expedition to Kâthiâvâd, though it had been his intention to avenge the disaster of Jiwâji Sâmraj, and to boast of his success; but his object was not accomplished.

By the advice and boldness of Premji Lohanâ, his Kâmdâr, the Rânâ Sulṭânji had employed all the Arabs he could enlist in his service on a higher monthly salary, and had thus become the source of disturbances. Accordingly the army was got ready to punish him, and when Premji saw his inability to resist in the field he began to tremble like a willow-leaf, and sent tribute in excess of the usual amount, as well as all the booty he had taken, and, in addition to this, costly presents obtained from the cargo of a ship sent by Navâb Haidar 'Ali as presents to the Khalifah of Baghdâd, and which vessel had been wrecked on his coast, and sought forgiveness of his transgressions.

In the year Sâmvat 1836 [A.D. 1780] there was a slight famine, during which the Sindhis of Devrâ and Khâgasri, under the leadership of Malik Muhammad and other Sindhis, had collected their people from all quarters, and commenced to plunder the country of Kumbhâji, who complained to the Divân Sâheb. Accordingly the army marched, and was joined also by Divân Govindji with his forces from Kûtîânâ; both forts were besieged and cannonaded, the garrisons fled, and they were taken possession of by the servants of the Jumâgâdh government.

The Thânadâr of Kândornâ, Jivâ Seth by name, an Amir of the Jâm Sâheb’s darbâr, was a brave man who constantly kept his army fighting, and supported it by plunder. In Sâmvat 1837 he ravaged Gâdhâli, in the parganah of Bhâvnagar, in Gohelvâd, and captured Motibâi, a Râjput Zamindâr who was the adopted uncle of the author, and imprisoned him in the fort of Mewâsá [under Kandornâ]. When this news reached the Divânji he quickly marched to Mewâsá; on the road, however, he met certain men coming from Dhrool with the intention of aiding Jivâ Seth; most of these he killed, and then besieged the fort. When Jivâ Seth saw death staring him in the face and fortune abandoning him, he sent out Motibhâi with valuable presents, and thus escaped from the whirlpool of destruction. Meru Khavâs, although he had arrived with an army at Karnoor to aid Jivâ Seth, had not the courage to do so, and halted there without engaging. Shekh Tâhir had formerly killed the half-brother of the Divân Sâheb Baghunâthji, by name Pipi, who was in charge of the artillery. To avenge this murder the Divânji marched against him in Samvat 1838, and obtained the place without fighting, and bestowed on him one or two villages in indâm. Gangâdâs, half-brother of the Divânji, and who formerly was Thânahdâr of Delvâdâ, owing to disputes with Sayyid Latîf and others came to Unâ and thence attacked Delvâdâ, but was killed by a musket-ball in the last-mentioned place; after that, Tuljârâm, the Divânji’s own brother, was slain in a fight, and in his place Parbhâshankar Nânâbhâi, a Bânsvâdâ Nâigar, who was a good soldier and a brave man, was made Thânâdâr of Unâ and Delvâdâ, and after great trouble he succeeded in subjugating the Bâbriâs, and the Habshî of Muzaffarâbâd and the Portuguese of Div feared him greatly.

On this joyful season of the Huli the Divânji Sâheb was desirous that the young Navâb Hâmîd Khân should preside over the festivities; accordingly within the camp many tents were pitched, and a spacious shâmianâh was erected, adorned with garlands, in which he was installed on a gorgeous throne of many hues, and numerous dancing girls were engaged for the occasion, and carried on their diversions with music and singing for a whole month.

Victory over the Jâm Sâheb Jasâjî, the Rânâ Sultânji, and Kumbhoji.

The Jâm Jasâjî was Jâm in name only, as he was kept by Merâman and Bhowân Khavâs, the Karbhâris, under surveillance, like a parrot in a cage, whilst they reigned in Nagar according to their pleasure, and collected much gold and silver. To free her husband from this tutelage, Achubâ Rânî, wife of the Jâm, the daughter of Râja Gaj Singh of Halwâd-Dhrângadhra, planned various stratagems. The Râja of Porbandar, Rânâ Sultânji, Kumbhoji the Râjâ of Gondal, and all the Zamindârs of those parts entered into an alliance, and after fighting some battles in the parganah of Kutîânâ in the month Maghsar Samvat 1838, encamped with their armies, which exceeded ants and locusts in numbers, on the banks of the river Bhâdar. To meet these foes the Divânji Sâheb marched with his glorious army, and pitched his tents near Jetpur. Merâman Khavâs discovered that he could not cross the river save by stratagem, and accordingly despatched Jagû Râval, a man whom he greatly trusted, with a humble message to the Divânji Sâheb to send over Rudrâjî Chânya and Punjmal, a Bânsvâdâ Nâgar, that he might treat with them; when, however, these two men arrived in his tent, he addressed them in so overbearing a manner that they could scarcely endure it, and replied in their turn that he was wrong in placing too much confidence in the multitude of his troops, and to consider the Divânji Sâheb as a weak man, but rather to liken him unto a valiant lion who can put to flight a flock of goats, or a hungry wolf who would disperse them like a herd of antelopes. At these words Merâman became afraid, and in the dead of night, when both these Vakils were fast asleep, he crossed the river with all his troops. As soon as the Divânji Sâheb was apprised of this, he beat the drum to pursue the enemy, whom he overtook in the plain of Pânchipîplâ, where Meru had drawn up his army in battle array, and surrounded his camp with large and small artillery. When the two armies encountered each other, the cannonade began immediately.

Verses:—

Troops numerous were here assembled all,
No one had ever seen the like before—
Combatants more than locusts or large ants,
All wielding dirks and fiery scimitars,
And furious like to raging elephants,
With poniards, spears, and arrows in their hands.
The rush of troops so blocked the roads
That earth's surface seemed too small for them.
The din of war arose from all the troops,
Black smoke confused the earth and sky in one.
The yells produced anxiety of heart,
They chased the sense from heads, and hues from cheeks.
The noise of kettle-drums, and laments of trumpets,
Made lions lose their way in deserts wide.
The brazen roar, enough to split the stones,
Distressed the Simurgh on Mount Qâf.
The lamentation of the Trumpet sounds Produced quaking fear in hands and feet.
The noise which the chiefs heard was such
That you have said the resurrection trump had sounded.

The antagonists fell upon each other like the waves of the ocean, the Divânji Sâheb’s army began to give way a little, but order was soon restored by the exertions of Muzafar Khân, Fatehyaß Khân Bâbî, 'Abdu’llah Khân, Abdul Rahim Khân (Karâni), Haiyât Khân Baloch, Harising Solankhi, Syad Karam 'Ali, Sayyid Gul
Muhammad, Mulvi Ahmadu’llah, Omar Khân
Khokhar, Himatlâl, Jitârâm, and Sampatrâm
Nâgar and others, who restored the battle.
Shekh Miân also arrived after the battle had commenced, and joined in it, and flashed like lightning on the threshing-floor of the enemies.

Verses:

What battle lines did they arrange!
Each champion looking for his rival foe.
Both armies were amazingly confused,
It seemed the sun and moon commingled were.
On both sides streams of blood did flow;
The fathers for their sons did look,
And all were waiting for the turn of fate.

At last the enemies were scattered like the stars of the Great Bear. Bhavân Khawâs, brother of Meru Khawâs, was wounded by a musket ball.
Meru, the commander-in-chief of Hâllâr, fled with all the troops, which would have found no resting-place, had not the mantle of night screened them, and the Divânji Sâheb with much joy took possession of the enemy’s camp, beating the shâdînâh drum of delight, and was applauded by everybody.

Merâman Khawâs, being thus foiled by this ill-luck, called to his aid the army of Sâna Khâs Khel Shamsher Bahâdur Mânâjî Gaikvâd, and the Divânji Sâheb, wishing to remain on good terms with the latter, returned to Junâgâdh and encamped near the town. The Zamindârs and the army of the Gaikvâd dared not follow him, but beleaguered Devrâ, which has four towers, and by cannonading it on all sides they demolished it after a week’s siege; but the garrison, under Fakirchand Purbiah, Balkhair, an Arab Jamâdâr, and Abherâm the Nâgar, were allowed to depart with their arms and ammunition, and after this affair the army of the Gaikvâd returned to Baroda. Hereupon the Divânji Sâheb proceeded with his victorious army to punish the Zamindârs for their rebellious spirit, and invaded the country of the Rânâ Sultanji, with whom Merâman Khawâs had made an alliance, but, time-server as he was, he broke it and supplicated the Divânji Sâheb to pardon his transgressions.

Accordingly he joined the army; and after devastating the country of the Rânâ the Divânji Sâheb left a detachment to besiege the fort of Khirasrâ, and proceeded with the army to collect the jamâbandi (revenue) from the Khambhât, Dhandhukâ, and Limbû frontier. The Rânâ, who was now helpless, agreed to pay a fine and heavy tribute, and to repair the fort of Devrâ, whereon he again obtained peace. During this year the parganah of Dâthâ came into the possession of the government of Junâgaâd.

Verses:—
The night is dark, the storm so terrible,
What know the happy people on the shore?

Murder of the Divân Sâheb Amârî.

The Navâb Sâheb Hâmed Khân left the army, which was on a mulukgiri expedition, in Sâñvat 1840 [A.D. 1784], on pretence of sickness, and made a night’s halt at Gondal on his journey; on this occasion Kumbhâji, who was always apprehensive that the Divân Sâheb might retake Dhorâji and Upletà, spoke as follows to the Navâb:—“I will give you three lâkhs of Jami kôdis if you will get rid of your Divân, who is an ambitious man and carries on the affairs of your state with a high hand, and if you effect this you will acquire independence and freedom from control, as well as full authority in your government.” When the Navâb Sâheb entered Junâgaâd he set about the execution of his plan, by alluring with abundant gifts and promises of high offices Manohardâs, son of Trikamdâs, a Nâgar of the Vaishñava sect who was in the confidence of the Divân Sâheb, and Mehta Khân and Jubah Khân Gujarâti and Jivan Khân Afghân, all of whom were companions and guards of the Navâb, to aid him in the execution there-of. Accordingly, when the Divân Sâheb had returned from the collection of the peshkash [tribute] to Junâgaqî during the Huli festival, and Bibi Sârdâr Bakhtâ, widow of the deceased Navâb Mahâbat Khân, invited him to the palace on the pretence of showing him the trousseau she had prepared for the marriage of Bibi Kamâl Bakhtâ, daughter of Ghâzi-al-dîn Khân to the Navâb Hâmîd Khân, and which consisted of garments, jewellery, with gold and silver ornaments, &c., they there put him to death. They who committed the deed acquired thereby eternal infamy. The murder was committed on the 11th Rabi II. A.H. 1198 (March 6th, A.D. 1784). On this occasion the author and Divân Dulabhji, with Desâi Sâmaldâs, and Rudrajji the Gomashtah, were thrown into prison, in spite of the aid of the Arab Jamâdâr Sheikh Muhammad Zubaidi, and Mâsud, and Sâleb Abdullâ, and Hâdî, and the Sindhi Jamâdâs Sharfud-dîn and Malhâr, and other Gujarâtis and Afghâns, but it availed nothing.

At this time the army of the Gaikvââd Morâr Râo Senâ Khâs Khel Shamsher Bahâdur was camped in the zillah of Gohelvââd, levying tribute. Rupaji Sindhia, who was a cousin of Mâdhavji Sindhia, the intimate friend of the murdered Divân Sâheb, accompanied the Gaïkvâd army. On hearing the melancholy news, he advanced by forced marches and encamped in the plain of Dhandusar, at a distance of four kos from Junâga dh, where he pitched his victorious tents. Thence he demanded from the Navâb Sâheb satisfaction for this wanton murder, and enjoined him to release the men whom he had imprisoned, as the Arabs had confined the Navâb to the Rang Mahâl until he should give proper securities; he therefore, perceiving the altered circumstances of the time, released the prisoners after one month.

Râval Vakhatsingh, observing his opportunity, expelled the thânah of Junâga dh which had been recently placed at the port of Mâhuwâ, and gradually acquired possession of Loiânâ, Patnâ, Salâdi, and other places. The Navâb Sâheb, when he saw there was no other remedy, invested Raghunâthji, the excellent son of the late Divânji Sâheb Amarji, with the garb of minister. The date of this event has been found by Pânti Miân Chisti as follows:

Verses:

“When Raghunâthji received the robe of the ministry
Venus came dancing with joy at the sight,
And a joyful voice issued from the sky
‘The good fortune which has departed has again returned.’”

* The numerical values of the letters amount to..........the year A.H. in which the event happened.
And the demands of the late Divânji Sâheb, which amounted to sixty lâkhs of Jâmi kôdis, were thus settled in the presence of the Gâekvâd, the ruler of the age.

The parganahs of U nâ, of D e l vâ dâ, of M â n g r o l, of S i l, and of D i v â s â were mortgaged until the liquidation of the debt with interest was effected. This was arranged in Saṃvat 1840. The second agreement was that the four villages of Halyâd, Bhensân, Antaroli, and Akhodar, bestowed as a reward for the conquest of the forts of Verâval and Kutiánâ, should be considered as a ransom for the murder of the Divân Sâheb, and his children should also receive five villages from the parganahs of Mângrol and Sutrâpâdâ respectively. To this agreement Sayyid Ghulâm Mahi-al-dîn and Sayyid Ahmad Qâdari, with the Arab and Sindhi Jamâdârs Haiyât Khân Baluch and Hari Sîng Qasbâti, stood security. As, however, the army of the Gaikvâd would not move without the consent of the sons of the murdered Divân, the Divân Dulabhji despatched the author to that chief of exalted fortune Morâr Râo Gaikvâd to plead for the pardon of the Navâb Sâheb. When the author arrived at the tents, the Gaikvâd himself, with Râja Nârâyaṇ Râo Pândre, Jivâji Sâmrajâ, Rupâji Sindhia, and the Nimbâlkar, the Sardârs of Baroda and the Deshmukhs, and Jamâdâr Hamid, and the Yemani Amirs Obayd, Qâsam, Hára, &c. came to condole with him one by one, and each noble presented him with two shawls and an embroidered scarf and turban. In all they amounted to about a hundred. The Râo Sâheb advanced a hundred paces from his private tent and presented me with a palanquin and with the turban from his own blessed head, and directed that I should be appointed his Divân, and Superintendent of a págah of 1500 horsemen according to the rules of Pândre; and the annual pay of all these men amounted to six lâkhs and forty thousand rupees, and to defray this he assigned the revenues of the parganahs Mâhuâdhâ, Amreli, Dâmnâgar and Kôdînâr, but, as I was brought up in this country, and had my relatives here, I could not accept of this bounty.

Finally the fort of Kûtiânâ was given to the Divân Govindji, and Unâ and the Mân-grol parganah to the Divân Dulabhji, Verâval to the Divân Raghunâthji, and Sutrâpâdâ to Sámalji Mânkaḍ, the maternal uncle of the author. In spite of his favours the Srimant Gaikvâḍ made a demand for these parganahs, but Divân Dulabhji, being faithful to his salt, refused to consent.

When the army of the Gaikvâḍ had marched away, Sayyid Sâlim, Abdu’lloha bin Hamid, Omar bin Hamid, Ahmed Umar, Sheikh Muhammad Zubeid, and other Arabs kept the Navâb Sâheb Hâmêt Khân for four months confined to his tents near the Vanthali Gate, to enforce payment of their arrears of salary. The Navâb, however, who was as cunning as Lokmân, sent for a covered carriage from the darbâr, and spread a rumour that his mother, the Bibî Sâhebah Sardâr Bakhtâ, whom he had not seen for several months, was coming to pay him a visit; the simple Arabs kept their guard without the tents, whilst the Navâb Sâheb made his servant Rahmat Khân lie down on his bed and represent him, whilst he left in the carriage in the assumed garb of a woman. As soon as he entered the Rang Mahal, he began to fire muskets and cannon upon the Arabs; when the Arabs saw that their scheme had failed, they took refuge in the Uparkot; this, however, he also attacked, and after some more fighting peace was concluded on the condition that the Arabs should receive one-half of the wages due to them. The Divân Dulabhji and others, being tired of the perpetual fightings, emigrated to Jêtpur with their families.

The Fort of Verâval is taken from the Divân Raghunâthji by treachery.

Since Sañvat 1836 the fort of Verâval had belonged to the Divân Raghunâthji, but three confidential leaders of sîbandi, namely, the Jama-dârs Rabyâ, Rakhyah, and Nebhor, and Tâj Muhammad Qamar, were decoyed by the Navâb to his own side from motives of gain, and they, forgetting the obligations under which they were to the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, expelled him from the fort; accordingly he went by the way of Gorakhmadi first to Jetpur, and then after a lapse of several months to Junâgâdh, during which interval Tāpidās Vaishnava and Manohardās Jikār, like reptiles of the earth, endeavoured to carry on the office of Divān, but were not tolerated longer than a week.

The Navāb Sāheb instigates the Arabs against the Divānji.

In this year there happened to be a partial famine; and Ibrāhim Khān, with Hānsōji and Atāji and Khānjī, having obtained a favourable opportunity, expelled Sāmalji (Mānkaḍ) from Sutrāpāḍā, and took possession of the fort; accordingly the Divān Dulabhji sent Parbhāshankar Faujdār from Unā with troops to besiege it, whereupon the garrison, being helpless, accepted the author as their governor. The Divān Dulabhji had gone on a progress through the country, and leaving Junāgaḍh had reached Unā when the Navāb Sāheb issued orders to have him killed, but was unsuccessful. Afterwards the Navāb instigated the Arab Jamadārs in Junāgaḍh who were in the employ of the Divān to abandon him; and Divān Govindji, with the Jamadār Shekh Muhammad Zubeidi, Sāleḥ A’bdullah, and other Arabs, was besieged in the Uparkōṭ, but after some fighting an arrangement was made that the moiety of their wages should be paid to them. Then the Divān Govindji went to Jetpur; and the Divān Dulabhji, who was at Unā, was joined by the Divān Ranchodji from Sutrāpāḍā, whence he had been expelled by Ibrāhim Khān Hansōji Panṭhān and others who were in expectation of such work. The Naváb Sâheeb appointed his servant Shekh Mahmúd Mângroli to conquer Unâ, and he took up a position at Gupt Prâg; and it happened that Mehtá Parbháshankar—a Bânsvâdâ Nâgar who had been a confidential servant of Divân Dulabhji, and had been employed by him for years, and who had been the Thânadâr of Unâ and Koðinâr, and who had subjugated the whole of Bâbriâvâd and Kâthiâvâd by his prowess, and whom the Governor of Muzaffarâbâd, (Jâfarâbâd) as well as the Portuguese of Diu feared—swerved from his loyalty in consequence of the events of the times, and instigated the Jamadârs of the Sirbandi, namely, Rayah (Rabî) and Punah, and Jesâ and Rahim, and Avud’Ali, to expel Dulabhji, which they did at the beginning of the rainy season. He now went to Delvâdâ, where also he was not allowed to remain, but the people there kept his son Morârji as their nominal Sardâr. The said Divân then stayed for a month at Dhorâjî, where he paid off the Arabs who had been in his service, and went to Jetpur, and was hospitably entertained all this time by Jâdejâ Kumbhâjî.

GUL KHÂN IS SLAIN. MARRIAGE OF THE BIBI SÂHEBAH KAMÂL BAKHTA, AND EVENTS OF YEAR 1842.

The Sindhi Jamadârs kept forcible possession of the fort of Vanthali to enforce payment of their arrears, whilst Jamadârs Karamshâh and Othmân and others had established themselves firmly in the Rang Mahâl at Junâgâdh; but the Navâb Sâheb, who in deceit and artifice excelled Kaliligah and Dimnah, induced the Arabs to slay the Jamadâr Gul Khân in the middle of the bâzâr during the celebration of the Îd, and to expel the other Jamadârs from the city by force. These men, however, took refuge in Vanthali, whither the Navâb himself went to oust them, and called to his assistance also Premji Lohâna from Porbandar, but after his arrival they could not agree, and he was obliged to return in disgrace. Now, since no one could carry on the work of Divân or subjugate the Sindhis, the Navâb found himself forced to go to Jetpur, where he remained fifteen days, and after a thousand supplications invested the Divân Raghunâthji with the official dress of Divân, and finally brought him to Junâgâdh; during the same year he contracted a marriage with the daughter of Navâb Ghâzal-din Khân, the Jâgirdâr of Sami, and Munjpur; the lady’s name was Kamâl Bakhtâ, and the wedding was celebrated in the town of Morbi, on which occasion the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji and Dulabhji gave large sums to Chârans and singers.

Conquest of the Fort of Sutrâpâdâ.

After Ibrâhim and Hânsoji Pattani had expelled the author, they took possession of the whole parganah of Sutrâpâdâ; the Divânji therefore gave orders to Parbhâshankar to come from Unâ and chastise them; and he issuing from Unâ punished them and expelled them from the fort after a month’s siege, and the author was installed there as Mutasaddi, and held the office for eight years.

Meanwhile the Navâb Sâheb carried on the government of Junâgâdh in a wavering manner, various factions intrigued against each other; and the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji again resigned his office; but as the Navâb Sâheb was unable alone to conduct affairs, he found himself under the necessity for six months of paying visits to the house of Raghunâthji to consult him, and finally he again persuaded him, whether he would or not, to accept the office of Divân.

Jâdejâ Kumbhâji, who was a shrewd man, at the time when a disagreement had taken place between the master and the servant, obtained a deed writing over permanently the jamâ of Gondal and of Jetalsar, Meli, Majethi, Lath, Bhimorâ, and the parganah of Sarsâi-Châmpardâ, on account of the three lâkhs of Jâmîs which he had advanced in Saîvat 1840.

Conquest of Kesoij.

The Râizâdah Dagoji, the Zamindâr of Kesoij, kept in his pay Arab Jamâdârs and Masu’d, Omar, Salomi and others, as well as Bayi Khân the Makrânî, and plundered the villages of Bântvâ; accordingly Edal Khân and Mukhtâr Khân implored the aid of the Divân Raghunâthji. Divân Dulabhji, who considered himself as the Nâib of the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, sent the author with a force and artillery to the theatre of war. The first place sacked and burnt by the enemy was Agatrâi; and at the instance of the injured people I started, and fought a severe battle in the plain of the locality just mentioned, in which the Jamadâr Omar Salomi was killed, and on our side Mukhtâr Khân was wounded by a dagger-thrust, but slightly, as he wore a coat of mail. The second battle, in which about one hundred and fifty men on both sides were wounded, was fought near the village of Mavânâ; it lasted long, as the Arabs, under the protection of date-trees, firmly held their ground.

In this fight a personal attendant of the Divân Ranchodji, with Jamadâr Jân Muhammad and the Risâlâh of Omar, made great exertions, so that Dagoji agreed to pay a fine, as well as restore the plunder he had taken in the Bântvâ parganah. A few months afterwards he became so embarrassed on account of the pay he owed his troops, that in Samvat 1844 he sold the fort of Kesoj to the Divân Dulabhji for a lâkh of Jâmi kôdis.

Divân Raghunâthji Takes the Forts of Chorvâd and Verâval, and Chastises Rânâ Sultânji.

As Sanghji Râizâdah, Zamindâr of Chorvâd, had lost his life in the battle at Mâliâ, and his survivors were perplexed how to pay the troops, they made over the fort of Chorvāḍ to Rāṇā Sultānji of Porbandar, who took possession of it, and at the same time raised a quarrel with Māngrol, but the time blinded his eyes from seeing the future, and made his mind arrogant. Ibrahim Khān Pattani and other rebels from the Junāgāḍh government had joined him, and he had enlisted them in his service, and he took possession of the fort of Vērāval by means of scaling-ladders during the night of the 13th Bhādarvā in Saṁvat 1844. Dīler Khān and Thānahdār Ghulāmī, the servants of the Navāb Sāheb, pulled off their shoes before they had even seen the water, and sued for quarter without having offered any resistance, and issued forth; however, Ghulāmī was killed. On that occasion the author, who had been for four years employed as Mutṣaddi of Sutrāpāḍ, as soon as he heard what had taken place, marched at once to the fort, but before I arrived the cowardly Dīler Khān had surrendered the fort. When this news reached Junāgāḍh, Divān Dulabhji, who considered news of this sort good tidings, exclaimed—

"Will dignity or gold avail a fool?
A kick is all that he requires!"

Divān Raghunāṭhji and Govindji managed the army, whilst Dulabhji, who suffered much from dropsy, remained in Junāgāḍh and sent to them the war material they required, and took care that the Sibandis were paid. Meanwhile the army besieged Chorvāḍ, and troops having assembled from all parts, Kumbhaji Jadeja was fortunate enough to serve there, and the gardens of Chorvâd were so devastated that cows and donkeys grazed on the celebrated* pân leaves, whilst the people crawled under the shade of plantain trees.

Ibrahim Khân, who was the commander of the Rânâ’ s forces, one day led a sortie against the besiegers and was killed by a musket-ball, and finally on the day of Kârtak Sûd first, in Sañvat 1845, the fort was assaulted on the side where it had been breached by the cannon on that occasion. The Navâb Sâheb and the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji mounted the breach as a bridegroom goes to meet the bride, and thus entered the city, and after applying scaling ladders, scaled the walls. O’mars Khokher and several other brave warriors showed much gallantry. Another assaulting party was led by Sâmålji Mânkar, the maternal uncle of the Divân, which entered the fort after a few musketry discharges from their Arabs, and the garrison after a slight resistance pleading for quarter saved their lives, and the family and children of Mokâji Râizâdah, the Zamindâr of Chorvâd, by the intervention of Kumbhaji Jadeja, were allowed to depart honourably to Dhoraji; and from this date the government of the Râizâdahs ceased to exist in Chorvâd.

After this victory the Navâb Sâheb marched with his victorious army to Verâval and laid siege to it. The Jemadars Rakhiah Karamshâh

* Chorvâd is celebrated for its pân gardens.
Malik Sultân Yahia Ben Mansur and Atâji and Dâwudji Kunwar defended the fort with a large garrison provisioned from the sea by way of Porbandar, and placing cannon on boats they cannonaded the camp, and also made a sharp attack on the besieging batteries, but eventually were repulsed. In those times Budhanâth, the abbot of Gorakmadi, who was very liberal and hospitable, happened to die, and the Navâb Sâheb Hâmed Khân despatched the author with Sheikh Mahmûd and Parbhashankar to console with the family. In the same year also Divân Dulabhji died suddenly of the dropsy on Mâgsar Wad 2nd, and although the Navâb Sâheb and the army were much distressed at the news, the Divân Raghunâthji and Govindji put their trust in the mercy of God, and continued the siege. At last on Posh Wad 6th they allured to their side Ali Khân· Atâji and Hansoji, and the Pattani Jamadârs, who from desire of their jâgirs and former service, turning from their allegiance joined the Navâb, and the following arrangement was made, that at midnight they should open the wicket in the gate and admit the Navâb’s men. The Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji in person and Divân Govindji, with the commanders of the forces Parbâshankar and Sâmâlji Mânkar, with 200 Arabs, 100 Sindhis and the Jamadârs Jiâ Jânkhra, Syad Salîm, Syad Ali, and others, entered the fort on the west side, which was as it were the rising east of the Navâb Sâheb’s fortune. Immediately on their making their attack, the garrison stood to their arms, and fought with such constancy and unspeakable gallantry that the angels in heaven were compelled to applaud their prowess. And now that the sword play ceased, they still fought with knives and daggers and blows and pushes, till their coats of mail were all rent, and the grainyard of existence was in many cases entirely burned up. In this affair Dâwudji, who was one of the cousins of Rânâ Sultânji, was slain by a musket-ball, and the garrison losing courage, fled under the cover of night. Most of them however died either of exhaustion after they had escaped and became a prey to vultures and crows, or were reduced to the most destitute condition by thieves and plunderers. In the morning, which is the time of the rising of the sun of fortune, they sent the good news to the Navâb Sâheb, who at once entered the city with great pomp and bestowed much praise on the Divân Sâheb.

After the conquest of Verâval the Navâb Sâheb proceeded with his army to collect peshkash, and then advancing by forced marches, plundered and ravaged the Rânâ’s country, who being distressed to see his country thus harried, and alarmed also at the siege of the fort of Kandornâ by the Divân Govindji, who was the governor of Kutiânâ, sued for peace, and agreed to pay a nozarânah and a fine, and on these terms peace was concluded in Sâmvat 1846.
The Arab Jamadârs Zobaidi, Sâlih A'bdullah, Muhammad Abu Bakr, Hâmed Mohsin and Hâmâd Nâsir with Nâji had in various emergencies stood security to the troops for the payment of their wages by the Navâb, who was at present also unable to pay their own salaries. They accordingly kept him in close confinement at the Rang-Mahâl, and prevented him getting either food or water, nor would they listen to the intercession of the Divân Raghunâthji. One day, however, the Navâb Sâheb seeing his opportunity, took several of his guards into his counsel, and by a thousand artifices contrived to escape from his Arab guards. Like a flash of lightning he then collected the Khânts and Sindhis from the surrounding country, by whose aid he expelled the Arabs from the town with shame and ignominy, and in this fight Utamrâm Ghodâdra Nâgar, who was a peshkâr [agent] of mine, was slain. The Arab Jamadârs who had possessed the fort of Chorwâr for some little time now ravaged the country, and my maternal uncle Sâmâlji encamped near Chorvâd with some sipahis to restrain their excesses. During this confusion [Divân] Govindji died, on the 10th of Mahasûd, in Sâmvat 1846.

In Sâmvat 1847 a great famine raged in the country, during which many persons of low caste became Musalmâns for the sake of bread, or emigrated, and Musalmâns became faithless. Grass became as precious as saffron, and grain was extremely dear; nevertheless the rayats of the parganahs of Mângrol, Verâval, and Pâtan, suffered during this heaven-sent calamity a great deal from the Arabs, but their depredations were put a stop to by the end of the year, and they surrendered the fort of Chorvâd, which was entrusted to the author, and I undertook myself to defray the pay of the soldiery. On this occasion Mehta Vâsanji Bin Vâsanji, a Nâgar, who was my maternal uncle, and Divân to the Jâm Jasâji, being on his way to Prabhâs and Prâchi, was present. The Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji having made an arrangement with his brother Morârji to divide the administration with him, took an army into the district to levy peshkash, of which however on account of the famine not much could be collected. Jamâdâr Hamid Sindhi now arrived in the Haweli parganah of Junâgaâdh on behalf of the Gâekwâr to collect peshkash, and when tribute was refused he commenced to ravage the country and laid waste many villages of the district of Verâval. On his return march, when he was at a distance of four kos from Junâgaâdh, the Arabs and horsemen who were loyal turned to attack him, and he himself was killed by a musket-ball in the conflict. This happened in Saîvvat 1848.

In the Saîvvat year 1849, on the 5th of Mâgsar, the Navâb Sâheb, with his usual faithlessness, at the advice of Kaliân Wânio and Mâdhurâibin Khushálrainágar, imprisoned the Diván Raghunáthji, with Bhai Morárji and their adherents Prabhashankar, Dayálji, and other Nágars, in return for their excellent service in conquering the country, and their houses were also plundered and their treasure confiscated. When this misfortune befell the family of the Diván Sâheb Amárji, the author happened to be at Chorvâd, and Antaji, the brother of Morárji, was at Unâ; they both made strenuous efforts to effect the liberation of the prisoners, and attacked the Naváb’s men on several occasions, and under the protection of Shri Budhá Bâvâ [the linga of Shiva in the possession of the Diván’s family] in the year 1869 plundered the forts of Ghoghá, Sarasíâ, Mâliâ, Kâgwâdar, and A’dri. On the 6th of Posh Wad
I plundered the village of Shergâdh, inhabited by the Maiyâs, and collected a great deal of booty.
In the fight at Kodinár, Bhai Antaji captured some of the Naváb Sâheb’s jamâdars and dismissed them from thence, but a Sirdar of his army, and Wânio Mâdhârji, the commander of their army, fell into a dry well and thus preserved the water of their lives.

In fine, on the 15th Posh Sud the Naváb Sâheb put to death Prabhashankar and Dayálji, the chief agents of Diván Raghunáthji, whom he set at liberty on the 11th Mahâ Vad, and six months afterwards he released also Morárji without levying any fine, and by the decree of fate I happened on the same day to get possession of the fort of Pâtana, held in behalf of Shekh Badar-ud-din by Kâzi Abd-ul Khâlik and Shekh Mâhmud. Now as we three brothers had been expelled from the country, we did not remain at Junâgaḏh in spite of the attention and courtesy of the Navâb Sâheb Hâmid Khân, nor would we accept the offers of Shekh Badar-ud-din to stay at Mângrol, nor those of Dâji of Dhorâji to stay there, but yielded to the sincere wish of Mehrâwan Khâvâs, the minister of Jâm Sâheb Jasâji, who had sent Mehtâ Adâbhâi with one hundred sowârs, a kettle-drum, and banner as far as Chorvâḏ to meet me, and went to Nawânagar, where I was presented with the parganahs of Pârdhari and Atkât in jâgîr. As I did not return quickly, the fort of Pâtan remained without a master, and the Pâtanîs, who have an old grudge towards the family of Shâîk Myân [Shekh Badar-ud-din] occupying it on behalf of the Navâb Sâheb, expelled my Thânadâr Kâzi Abd-ul Khâlik from thence.

Morârji, son of Divân Dulabhji, went to Bhâvnagar and obtained four villages in jâgîr, and Mangalji, son of Divân Govindji, who was of tender age, had all his gold seized as a fine (by the Navâb); he remained for a short time in the service of Rânâ Sultânji and of the Jâm Sâheb Jasâji, with a pâga of horse. The Navâb now, whilst the office of Divân at Junâgaḏh was jointly held by Kalyân Seth and Madhurâi, son of Khushalrâi, exacted a fine of 10 lâkhs of jâinis from the Somparâ and Nâgar Brâhmans.
In Samvat 1850 Ráwal Wákhtsingh began to harass the Káthis, who lived under the special protection of Junâgađh. Accordingly an army was sent from thence to aid them; Ráwal Wákhtsingh attacked Chital, which is the residence and habitation of the Káthis, and the force sent in aid under Jamâdâr Abdullah and Chotamlâl Nâgar evacuated the place.

On their return from a mulukgiri expedition, the Naváb Sâheb and Kályán Seth happened to meet Mehrâman Khawâs at Kâlâwad, on which occasion the Naváb Sâheb said to the Diván Sâheb Raghunâthji with his own gracious mouth:—"I was wrong, I was wrong. Forgive what has passed; I give you the Divânship;" after that he placed the hand of the said Divân in that of Mehrâman Khawâs, saying, "this is a pledge on my behalf."

Madhurâi, a Gujarâthi Nâgar, who gave vent to his high aspirations after the departure of the Divân Raghunâthji, although he was a duftar-writer, considered himself able to discharge the functions of a Divân, and actually did so conjointly with Kályán Seth, sharing equally in the profits. In a short time, however, according to the proverb that "ten Darveshes find room under one coverlet, but not two sovereigns in one kingdom," Kályán Seth and Madhurâi quarrelled with each other, the former took refuge in the house of Syad Ghulâm-Mâhya-ud-din, and the latter, abandoning all hopes of safety, departed at midnight under the protection of the Jamādārs Ahmed Qor, Sheikh Sāyd, Nāsir Yamani, and Musa Muharriz Arab, through a passage dug under the western wall, and arrived on foot with his family in Vanthali, after suffering a thousand indignities. To punish him, the Navāb dispatched an invitation to the Divān Sāheb Raghunāthji, who sent the author from Nāgar with troops, whereon the Navāb Sāheb took his station beneath the fort, and Madurāi, being alarmed, agreed to pay a ransom in cash and evacuated the fort. He went a few months afterwards from Gondal to Baroda with Bābāji Saheb, who had come to this country to collect the jamābandi, and in course of time his previous services were taken into consideration by the Navāb, who gave him the jāgir and office of daftari, and as he had no son, his son-in-law Keshavlāl received his appointment, which he still holds.

In Samvat 1851 Māhādāji Sindhia procured a vakil's appointment for Madurāi by his influence to the Court of the Bādshāh of Delhi, and obtained through his efforts a sanad prohibiting the slaughter of cows throughout Hindustan. On that occasion he received also a dress of honour, a turban plume of pearls, a bracelet studded with diamonds, and a necklace of the same kind; earrings, anklets, and inkstand and pentray, a seal, shield, sword, Arab horse, an elephant and howda, two elephants with drums and banners, and a palanquin. In the year St. 1851 also,
Prince Bahâdur Khân Bahâdur Bâbi, of exalted fortune, was born; of his mother Râjkunwarbâ on Jêth wad 12th, the date of his birth is embodied in the word. May God grant him long life.

The Divânshe of Kalyân Seth.

When Madhurâi his rival disappeared, Kalyân Seth, considering that the rose was now without a thorn, carried on the administration on his own responsibility. In Saâvat 1852 Fateh Muhammad Notyâr, minister of the Râo Sâheb, came from Bhuj with a numerous army and crossed the Rañ with the intention of ravaging Hallâr. Accordingly Merûman Khawâs invited the aid of a band of Afghâns under Sher Jang Khân Alif Khân, Zulfiqâr Khân, Ánwar Khân, Karimdâd Khân, and Sâheb Dâd Khân, who in the service of Malhâr Râo Gâekwâr, zamindar of Kadi, had acquired much fame when warring against Strîmant Râo Sâheb Govind Râo Gâekwâr, and agreed to pay 2 lâkhs and 15,000 jâmis to them as remuneration for their services; he also obtained the alliance of the Navâb Sâheb, who marched with his Arab and Sindhi Regiments under Mukhtiâr Khân Bâbi, Jamâlkhân Balûch, Harising Solankhi the Grâsiâ of Bâlâgâm, the auxiliaries from Mangrol, the Qasbâtîs of Kutîânâ, the Kâthis, and the pâgâdârs Azam Beg and Jamiat Khân, and joined the Nâgar army at the village of Dhensarâ, of the Âmbran parganah. Meanwhile the army of Bhuj encamped at a distance of about half a kos from us. I went with my brothers and a Risâlah of troops as a body-guard to the Nâvâb Sâheb; but after a while, Gajsing, the Râjah of Halwaş and Dhrângadhrâ, who was a relative of the Râo, arrived, and by his mediation peace was concluded, the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji representing Nagar in the negotiation, and Kalyân Seth Junâgadh; a battle being thus averted, the armies separated.

March of the Nâvâb Sâheb Against Bhâvnagar, and the Unsatisfactory Result.

The Nâvâb Sâheb marched with his army from Dhensarâ against Râwal Wakhtsingh, because the Râwal had conquered the fort of Kûndâla, of which place Morârji, son of Divân Dulabhji, was thânadâr, and had also taken the fort of Râjulâ. The Nâvâb Sâheb captured Kânyâji Gohel in the Goghâbârah, and ravaged the country of Bhâvnagar; thence he came and encamped at Chital, and collected a great number of Kâthis and ordered a march with the intention of destroying Bhâvnagar. On the other hand Râwal Wakhtsingh also came to meet him, with a large and well equipped army, and encamped in the Dhasâ plain, opposite to the Nâvâb's camp. For one whole day both armies were engaged and kept up a constant cannonade. The Nâvâb Sâheb, considering the cowardly character of Kalyân Seth, perceived that peace was the only means to escape from this calamity, and therefore concluded it with the approbation of all his advisers, and agreed to receive one lakh and fifteen thousand Rupees, and wrote parwâ-nahs for the forts of Kuñḍalâ and Rājulâ, and pardoned Wakhtsingh his past transgressions. To make his return to Junâgaḍh glorious, the Navâb first took possession of the fort of Mâliyâ, which he conquered from the grâsiâ Pithâyat Háthi, after a siege of three days.

The Jamâdar Ámin cannonades Manjâvâdi.

In Sañvat 1854 Ámin Sâheb, a son of Jamâdar Hamid, became the Subah of Kâthiâwâr on behalf of the Gâhâni; and to avenge the blood of his father [killed by the Navâb of Junâgaḍh] made his appearance at Manjâvâdi, the battlements of which place he broke down with his cannon, and after taking treble the amount of the usual jamâbandi according to the rules of of Sivrâm Gardi, he departed.

Kalyân Seth, the Baniya who had formerly been the modi (purveyor) of the Divân Sâheb, not considering treachery unlawful, caused Parbâsankar and Dayâlji, confidential servants of the Divân, to be killed, and thus himself became Divân; afterwards however he was so much harassed by the soldiery, who clamoured for their pay which was in arrears, that he spent the whole rainy season under a thousand difficulties in the jungle of Kantoliá, and desired in some way or other to lessen the glory of Junâgaðh. With this view he incited the Navâb Sâheb to conquer the fort of Dhândhalpur, the zamindar whereof was the Kâthî Godað Khavað, but after a siege of two months, he was forced to retire unsuccessful. When he arrived in Junâgaðh, the Arabs assaulted his house for the payment of their wages.

The Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji is recalled from Nagar.

When the Navâb Sâheb perceived that not one of the pillars of the State was able to extricate him from this difficulty, in Saumvat 1857 he despatched some of them, such as Jamuât Khân Shîrvâni, Mûlchand, Hayât Khân Baluch, Amarji Jhâlâ, and others to Nagar with letters to the Jâm Sâhib Jasâji, declaring that he would confer a great obligation upon the Navâb by sending back the Divân Raghunâthji; accordingly the latter, although aware of his master’s fickle temper, and of the envy of Wâniá Karsandás, of Nâgar Kâhandâs, Âzam Beg Chelâ, and others, he took into account that sincere excuses had been made, and that it was his duty, whether he liked it or not, to comply with the wishes of his old master, and went to Junâgaðh, where he collected an army and took up a position at Vanthali, with the intention of subjugating both Kutíâna and Bântwâ.
The author had been for two years at Porbandar, to which place Prabhudas and Kamal Chela were sent to recall him; and on the occasion of his departure the Ranaj presented him with a dress, a necklace of pearls, a palanquin, and a litter. When I arrived at Ranawav, the cultivators of the Mahiari parganah complained that Kalyan Seth had plundered them and carried off much property. To break his power I accordingly engaged the services of the Jamadars Muhammad Naisir Boraq, Shaker Khan, Sardar Khan, Gulbakh Khan, Muhammad Rafia, Morad Thor, Murad Khan Mekrani, and many others, and encamped at Meth-Kotad. Hereupon Mukhtar Khan Babi lost heart and came to my tent, repenting, separated from Kalyan Seth, made peace, left his son's wife to the Navab, and departed for Bantwa after receiving a safe conduct.

Reduction of the Fort of Kutian.

During the 14th night of the dark half of Asu of Samvat 1657, I placed ladders against the north wall and entered the fort of Kutian with the Afghans and Arab Jamadars and the Sipah Salar Prabhudas Nagar. Kalyan Seth, however, came to meet us, was defeated and besieged in the Kali-koja. Meanwhile the Divan Sabeel Raghunathji, who was stationed at Wanthali and passed his time between fear and hope, heard of what had taken place and advanced. As I was harassing the foe with artillery from the towers and house tops in various directions, and was not expecting or needing any assistance, he encamped with his force near the Bhâdar river. Three days after the Jamâ-dârsa Yahya and Nâsir Yamâni, with Gangasingh and Khândân and Ghiga, Hâmâd Sindhi, and many others, sued for mercy and came out. The Divân Sâheb left the settlement of this affair to myself, and marched off with his force to collect the ja-mâbandi, accompanied by Kûñwar Dewâji Jâdejâ, and levying peshkash as he proceeded, finally reached the Dhandhûkâ frontier, as his father had been in the habit of doing, and encamped in the Limbâdi pargâna, where he took up his quarters. Kalyân Seîôh, being distressed and reduced by the war, was taken prisoner with his wife and family on the 3rd of Mûgsar Sûd of Samvat 1858 and placed in confinement at Kandorna; but Muharriz, the Arab Jamâdâr, held out in the fort, and was suffered to depart on being paid the sum of 22,000 Jami koris, which was due to him as wages. Kalyân Seîôh, with his whole family, was conveyed to Patan Div, where the Navâb Sâheb was at that time residing. He honoured me by marching one kos to meet me, and made enqui- ries about the conquest of Kutiânâ, which I narrated to him in the following terms:—“ We belea- guered the citadel during a whole month from four sides, and poured fire into it from cannon and muskets, but as it was extremely strongly built of hewn stone, the cannon balls took no effect. Accordingly I dug a mine on the east and another on the west, and it so happened that the latter was on the same spot where formerly the Divân Sāheb Amärjī had dug one when he besieged Hāshim-Khān; this mine I abandoned and filled the eastern mine with gunpowder, but got no chance to blow it up. For one night, Murād Khān Makrānī set the gate of the fort on fire. Next day after battering down the battlements of the fort with my cannon, it was my intention to place ladders against the walls of the fort and to scale it. Kalyān Seth, however, being unable to hold out longer, hung out a flag of truce and surrendered himself with his whole family, whereon the fort came into the possession of this Sirkār."

On hearing this recited, the Navāb Sāheb was greatly pleased, and extolled my bravery and courage; Kalyān Seth was again delivered into my custody, and dying by the decree of God in prison, was requited for his works. The forts of Chorwāj and Unā, held by Lakhmiprasād, the son of Kalyān Seth, were then taken possession of and surrendered by me to the officers of the Navāb Sāheb; then I took leave, and proceeding by quick marches, and chastising Ánandpūr en route, I arrived at Limbārī and there met the Divān Sāheb Raghunāthji. At that time (in Saṁvat 1858) the army of the Gaekwād laid siege to Kādī, and by the intervention of Mir Sāheb Kamāl-ud-dīn Hūsain, he obtained the aid of the English Government. Accordingly a general arrived from Bombay with cannon of dragon-like aspect and landed at Khambhāt. At this time vakils arrived on the part of both Malhār Rāo and the Ānt Gaekwār to ask for aid, but it so happened that in our doubt as to which would be successful, we ended by joining neither and marched back to Junāgaḍh. In a short time, after severe fighting, the army of the Gaekwār conquered the fort of Kaḍi, Śivrām, the commandant, and others who were in the service of Malhār Rāo, fled and dispersed in the surrounding districts, and when Malhār Rāo perceived that there was no way of escape for him, he went to the tent of the general and begged for quarter; his brother Hammantrāo departed to the territories of Bhūj, and he himself received the parganah of Naḍiyād from the Gaekwār government. Nevertheless two years afterwards, in Saṃvat 1860, Malhār Rāo fled to Kāthiawār, where he engaged the services of all the desperate characters out of employ, such as Jamādār Umar Hāmid Umar, with other Arabs and Sindhis, and became the centre of rebellion and raised disturbances. He plundered the country, but the zamindārs did nothing to defend the honour of the Gaekwār, and at last the army of the latter marched against him under the command of the Divān Sāheb Vīthal Rāo, and pursuing him closely captured him on the plain of Bhāvnagar and surrendered him to the English, who carried him to Bombay, where he died.

In Saṃvat 1859 I was collecting tribute in the parganahs which did not regularly pay tribute, and levied double the usual amount, when I was met in the vicinity of Dhrangdra by the army of Commandant Sivram and of Hanmant Rao, but they were unable to hinder me in any way. Mukand Rao Gakwar rebelled and raised a disturbance in the fort of Amreli, and excited a great sedition in the country. He captured the Nagaar Desayas of Wansawad and demanded from them a ransom. To punish him I marched by the command of the Navab Sâheb with an army, and after a week's siege liberated the Desais and expelled Mukand Rao, who marched away in repentance and distress. In Saumvat 1860 Babaji Sâheb, the divan of the Gakwar, passed through this country with an army numerous as locusts, and levied thrice the amount of money Commandant Sivram had been in the habit of taking. Babaji also besieged the fort of Vanthali for two months ineffectually. Accordingly he marched off in great dudgeon and plundered the surrounding country as far as Patan Div, and hindered the pilgrims from visiting Sri Somnatha; the author followed him everywhere with a numerous army, fighting with him continually; finally obtained from him all the deeds of agreement to pay tribute which he had extorted from the people, and taking tribute only according to the custom of the country, he returned. From the time of Babaji Sâheb the tribute of this country was raised to thrice its former amount.

During Saumvat 1861, whilst the author was away as far as Râjkot and the Sarvaiya country to collect peshkash, Âzam Beg Chela, Karsandâs a Vaniyâ, and Kâhandâs induced the Navâb Sâheb to take part in carousals and drinking bouts, with music and dancing and singing, and administered the affairs of the state as they chose, and at their instigation the Navâb Sâheb mortgaged the parganah of Kutiânâ to the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, as security for the new debt of ten lakhs of jâmis which he owed him.

In the year 1862 Khima, Bhojâ, Karna, and other mehtâs, being disgusted with the tyranny of Karsandâs, took refuge at Kutiânâ, but afterwards took up a position at Dhrâti, from which they made predatory incursions. At last, after paying a fine, they were allowed to return to their former posts.

Mehtâ Revâshankar bin Trikamdâs, with Dâyârâm Nâgar, administered the office of Divân for three or four years, but only in name and under the dictation of Karsandâs, and Âzam Beg led out the army to levy jamâbandi but did not even annoy an ant. This fitful and unpromising administration lasted two or three years, and from that time the marching out of armies from Junâgâdh for the mulukgiri expeditions was put a stop to, and giving up the right of collecting the jamâbandi, they received a fixed amount from the English Government. In the year 1864 Mehtâ Revâshankar and Madhurâi arrived on the part of the Nâvab Sâheb at Kandorna, whilst I was likewise there paying my respects to Colonel Alexander Walker. The Divân Sâheb Vithal Râo, who bore a grudge towards the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, because he had hindered Bâbâji Sâheb from conquering the fort of Vanthalî and from paying a visit to Somnâth, and because he himself aspired to obtain possession of Junâgaâdh and to turn out the said Divân, calumniated him to the Colonel Sâheb; the latter, however, being as it were the Nushirwân of the period, gave the following plain answer:—“An explanation will be asked about the sixty lakhs owing to the Divân by the Navâb as fixed by the Gâekwâr as a debt, as well as about the sixteen villages promised as blood ransom for the Divân Amarji’s murder but treacherously taken away again from him in the year 1849. I will also attach all the country conquered by the efforts of the Divân Sâheb Amarji and will hand it over to his son Divân Raghunâthji; and by what sanad of the Sultân of Delhi is the Navâb in possession of the state of Junâgaâdh.” When they had heard these words they became like flies in oil. On the festival (first) of January, Colonel Walker said to the Divânji Sâheb Vithal Râo and to the officers of the Navâb Sâheb in a public assembly—“You are the Divâns of the Gâekwâr Sarkâr and of the Navâb Sâheb, but this is the Divân and leader of our army, and whoever is his enemy is the enemy of the English Government.” After that a fine was paid by the Junâgaâdh State for the goods the pirates of Nawâ Bandar had robbed from vessels bound to Surat and Bombay. Walker Sâheb Bahâdûr and Robertson Sâheb and Ballantyne Sâheb and others honoured the author by being present at nâches given by him. I have never seen a man so high and noble-minded as Alexander Walker, of little speech but great intelligence, acquainted with the affairs of government, versed in all political matters, and capable of appreciating men of worth. He conquered the fort of Kandorna in half an hour, and obtained a share in the Porbandar customs; he demolished the fort of Châyya and also put the Gâekwâr under obligations to him. At last he went to Europe and left a good name behind him.

On the 10th of Kârtak Ŝud in Sâmvat 1862, Hallaji, on account of his rebellious and perverse disposition, made a treaty with Colonel Alexander Walker after his return from an expedition to Okha, in consequence of which he ceded the moiety of the customs of that port, as well as the east and north gate to the English. I paid my respects to the Colonel and was presented with a dress of honour.

On the 4th of Phâlgûn of the year 1807, corresponding to A.H. 1226, the Navâb Sâheb, the qiblâh of the inhabitants of the world, the angelic tempered Hâmed Khân Bâbi departed this life. The duration of his reign was 36 years 3 months and 5 days; he was intelligent, sweet spoken, and faithful to his word, but apt to change with the times, ready to take offence, and slow in action. So excellent a sovereign is rarely seen in this world.

NAVB Sêheb Bahâdur Khân bin Hâmid Khân Bahâdur Bábi.

This young prince with his mother Rûjkûnwar was kept at Patan, because on returning home after a certain marriage procession which he attended on foot in the town, an Abyssinian boy in his service placed an earthen pot full of fire-wood close to the Navâb’s palace and setting fire to it fled. As the Navâb Sâheb experienced much inconvenience by this fire, he considered that the boy had been instructed to act thus by his mother and therefore removed the prince to Patan. After his father’s death, however, he was brought back to Junâgadh by the Jamâdar Omar Mokhâsam, Ázam Beg Chelâh, Kahândâs Vaishnâv, Mugatrâm Bakshi, Jhinâ Mehta, and others, and ascended the throne in his 18th year, 9th of Phâgan Sud, Samvat 1867 (A.D. 1810).

The Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji had been living for seven years at Kûtiâna; he kept his family at Mângrol, and enjoyed the jâgîr of Rânpur from Nagar. But now Omar Mokhâsam, Hâmid Amru, Sâlim Bin Hamid, Hasan Abu Bakr, Karsand-dás the Baniah, Kahândâs Vaishnava, Mugatrâm Bakshi, Jhinâ Mehta, Vâghji Deesai, and others, arrived in Kutiâna, and with a hundred solicitations, promises, and oaths upon the Korân, and on Jamial Shâh Pir, carried him to Junâgaâh to be Divân. On his arrival the Bai Sâhibah Rajkûnwar, as well as the Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân, received him with great kindness, but often repeated that in these times the power of the Gâekwaâd and of the English Sarkâr was greatly on the increase, moreover that the State was encumbered with a debt of a karôr of jâmîs due partly to the army and partly to the mutasaddis, and that no other man except himself, whose family had occupied the Divânship for fifty years, could carry on the administration of the Government properly. The Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, true to his salt, accepted the office in perpetuity for himself and his descendants.

In Saânvat 1868 Carnac Sâheb and Gangâdhâr Sâstri, who were both in appearance and in reality distinguished men of the period, arrived with an army and brought also Srimânt Fatehâsing Rao Gâekwar Sena Khás Kheyl himself, with the Divân Sâheb Vithal Rao, the Jemâdar Amin Sâheb, Mir Sâheb Kamâlu’d-dîn Husain, &c. to attack Navânagar, because one of the Arab Chokidârs of the fort of Modpûr had unjustly killed one of the English Sâhebs; but the Jâm Sâheb of Nâgar was so jealous of his own rights that he refused to give up the murderer in spite of the pressing demands of the English. When the army of the English and of the Gâekwâd departed from Nagar, they marched to Lâlwaḍ, which is four kos distant from Junâgaḍh, and encamping there set forth their claim for a Nazarânah from Bahâdur Khân on account of his succession to the throne. On that occasion the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji took care of the defences of Junâgaḍh, and the obstruction of the roads, the erecting of thorn-thickets, and the destruction of the water-courses as dictated by foresight; but the sequel proved that all precautions of this kind were useless, for Mr. Carnac was of a kind disposition, and enmity was soon turned into friendship. Gangâdhar Śâstri took the Divân Raghunâthji and the author to see the wedding of the daughter of Divânjî Sâheb Vithal Râo at Amreli, where they assisted at the festivities usual among Amirs, and received presents of dresses, ornaments and food—every guest being presented with cash and other articles according to his position in society; also the mutasaddis of the Navâb Sâheb’s private household made their appearance, and came to exchange presents, not suspecting any harm to their master’s affairs, they had set on foot thousands of intrigues against us, and considered that if a settlement with the Navâb were to take place by the mediation of the Divân Raghunâthji, his family would rise in importance, which would be a loss to them. Accordingly they had brought letters from the Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khan, addressed to the Divân Sâheb, to Vithal Râo, to Rájubâ, and to Gangâdhar Sâstri, to this effect: “Now leave off negotiations, as you cannot obtain what you wish from the Divân Sâheb. I will think over your demands and at a future time obey your wishes.” The Divânji being thus helpless, asked for leave. Carnac Sâheb and Gangâdhar Sâstri gave us much consolation and comforted us; and if we had at that time accompanied them to Baroda, we should no doubt have attained to a very exalted rank.

When we returned to Junaâgârdh we consulted with Râjkunâwarbai whether we should agree or not to the Gâekwâr’s order. She (at the instigation of her private advisers) said with a loud voice, “We will not give even a span’s breadth of land, but have no objection to give a moderate nazâvarânah in money.”

The Divânji Sâheb Vithal Râo, considering that the field was now clear, held out promises of presents to Jamâdâr Omar Mokhâsam and the private Kârîbhâris, and obtained a deed in writing giving over the parganas of Kedînâr and Amreli to the Gâekwâr’s government, and by degrees they also encroached and got several other tâlukâs also under their authority, and they completed the fortifications of Amreli, which had been commenced in the time of the late Navâb Hâmid Khân.

During Saâmvat 1869 (A.D. 1812-13) there was a severe famine; rain did not fall, and on account of the want of grass and grain many people died.
During the preceding year, i.e. 1868, a comet was seen in the sky during four months; its tail looked like a broom turned upside down, and its length was eight cubits. In astronomical books its description is as follows:—

विज्ञानसे इतते विशुद्धारा।

Next year, that is to say in Samvat 1870, such a pestilence raged, that many who had survived the famine died of it. Sounds of wailing and lamentation issued from every house, and many corpses were left exposed in the midst of the bazar for two or three days, so that Hindus were unable to burn their dead, and Musalmans to shroud and bury theirs, and on the 6th of Māgsar Sudha, also my brother, of blessed memory, who was a pillar of the state, and a shining light in the family of Divān Sāheb Amārji, whose name was Dalpatrām, departed this life, and we two surviving brothers suffered much grief at his loss, but there is no remedy for what is past.

Affairs of the Jamādār Omar, and his Expulsion by the Aid of the British.

Aspirations to the office of Divān inflamed the head of the Jamādār Omar Makhāsām, and he became ambitious and desirous of obtaining this exalted post, and therefore he enrolled the Jamā-dār Hasan Abu Bakr Salah Bin Abud, Sālim bin
Hamid, and others in his interests; he obtained also aid and countenance from the Divânji Sâheb Vithal Râo, and carried on the administration of the Navâb Sâheb’s government; and got the control of all the thânahs into his own hands, but alienated the parganah of Amreli and Kodi-nâr to the Gâekwâr by way of securing his good graces, and with the aid and co-operation of the Divânji Sâheb Vithal Râo most ungratefully tried in every way he possibly could, to injure the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji.

The taking of Kutâna.

The Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji went for the purpose of performing ablutions in the Godâvar-Gangâ at Nâsik Trimbak, whilst the author went on pilgrimage to Bêcharaji Mâtâ, Sidhpur and Ambâji. The Navâb Bandah Ali Khân, zamindâr of Khambhât, at Sidapet Bharoch, Resident Romer Sâheb, Agent at the port of Surat, with Carew Sâheb, who were all men of noble disposition, and the râjas of every locality, received the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji with honours, feasted him, and gave him escorts through their dominions. Carnac Sâheb, who had once been our guest at Kutâna, said at the second interview:—“O Divân Sâheb, you are attached to the Honourable Company Sarkâr, and you, as long as you live, and your children afterwards, may expect favours for a long time.” In fine this Jâtrâ cost forty thousand Rupees. Gangâdhar Śâstri, who had formerly at Amrelí kissed the feet of the Divân Sâheb Raghunâtâbji, and who had now gone as Vâkil to the Court of Śrimant Amratâro at Pûna, sent him an invitation to come there, but no meeting could take place on account of the hot season, and Gangâdhar Śâstri himself was killed in that country. When we two brothers returned (from the pilgrimage) and arrived in Amrâli, we thanked the Divân Sâheb Vithalrâo for the hospitable treatment we had met with at Perân Pâtan from Nâgars Mûgatrâm and Motâbhai, and Nânâbhai the Majmûdâr, and from Bandâji the Mukâsahdâr, and from Bahâdûr Singh the wine seller.

The Divân Sâheb, unwilling to practice treachery, and out of regard to Jamâdâr Omar Mokhâsam, entered into negotiations with Ballantyne Sâheb; for we considered the English Government our protector. But he (Ballantyne Sâheb) did not act according to his own will, but his mind was entirely under the influence of Sûndarji Khatri, and he caused the parganahs which we held in mortgage for the sum of 10,000 jâmīs and for the farm of which I had paid a sum of 70,000 jâmīs, besides the ghânim verdâ, to be restored to the Navâb. The Divân Sâheb, who relied on the favour of the English Government, when he saw Ballantyne Sâheb no longer showing kindness to him, became helpless, and was unable to offer any remonstrance.
The fancied tyranny he did to us,
His neck it stuck to, over us it went.
And in exchange for those mahâls which the Navâb Sâheb had mortgaged to us, and on account of which 30 lâkhs of jâmîs were due, he caused to be written over to us in jâgîr, on the security of the English and Gâekwâr Governments, the four villages of Khâgasri, Iswariâ, Meswânâh, and Wâdâsârâ; this was in Sâmvat
1871 (A.D. 1814-15).

Marriage of Sambhu Parsad.

When the light of my eyes Sambhuprasâd, son of Dulpatrâm's wedding with the daughter of Ávalram Ambáidâs was solemnized, the Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân honoured it with his presence and came to see the spectacle in which various performances by male and female actors, musicians and singers were going on, and the place was decorated with various sorts of lamps made of glass, mica, coloured paper and ware, which transformed day into night and night into day.
The marriage procession was escorted by a thousand soldiers on horseback and foot, and was accompanied by numerous chariots, carts and elephants; but the Divânji Sâheb Vîthal Râo and Ballantyne Sâheb, although they had sworn that they would come, remained away under the pretence that the impending siege of the fort of Kandorná was engrossing their attention. After the Diván Sâheb Raghûnâthji had completed the nuptials of his son and performed the Mâhâru-dra Yagna, he retired from the world, and engaged in the worship of his God, but Jamâdâr Omar Mokhâsam’s enmity towards him did not abate.

Dismissal of the Jamâdâr Omar.

The ingratitude of Jamâdâr Omar Mokhâsam impelled him one day to rush with some Arab Jamâdârs into the Rang Mahâl, and to lay his hand on the waist of the Navâb Sâheb, but Jamâdârs Sâlim and Hasan, his faithful attendants, and excellent good fortune saved him, and thus Jamâdâr Omar’s evil designs were frustrated, and he was expelled from the city with contumely and disgrace, and commenced to strengthen himself in the districts.

The Navâb Sâheb, when he saw the evil designs and foolish ambition of the Jamâdâr, began to fear for his life, and sought aid from the Diván Raghunâthji, both by promises and oaths, and accordingly the Diván Sâheb, whose heart was devoted to the Navâb’s interests, betook himself to Ballantyne Sâheb without the knowledge of the Diván Vithal Râo, who was a firm friend of Jamâdâr Omar’s. Now Sundarji Khatri, who was a resident of Kachh and a dyer by caste, had emerged from poverty by the aid of the holy Râmâswar, and first became of note in the world by trading in horses with the English Government.
and had by degrees become the agent of Ballantyne Sâheb. And Ballantyne Sâheb had made his agent, as it were, a Shâh Bâlâ whom Hindus send in front of the bridal procession as it passes through a city, and send with him their sons and daughters in gorgeous array: nevertheless he derives no advantage from the office of Shâh Bâlâ nor from the borrowed clothes and jewels with which he is decked, except the name:

But this Sundarji assumed the title of Subah, and by false and lying representations had frightened or cajoled all the world, and thus collected much gold. Since he was a sincere friend of the Divân Sâheb, he made an ally of him in this matter, and accordingly the author of this book, and Mugatrâm and Amrullah, repaired to the camp to see Ballantyne Sâheb. At this time the Arâbs had been expelled from Nawânagar by order of the English Government, and then Ballantyne Sâheb, according to the agreement made, came to Junâgaâh with his army, and Aston Sâheb, who was in command of the troops, entered the city with a body of soldiers and two guns, to expel Jamâdâr Omar. This Jamâdâr, whose prosperity was thus cut short, was thus expelled the city with concealed face and bare feet, and after a time the affairs of the Jamâdârs were settled through Ballantyne Sâheb, as follows.

Jamâdâr Omar was granted the villages of Timbî and Pipliâ, and one lakh and fifty thousand jâmis by fixed instalments. Hasan Abu Bakr received 40,000 Jâmîs (koris), and Sâlim Hamid obtained the village of Sângâwârâ, and they wrote bills of release for the moneys due to them as salaries, and their vakils took their leave. After this the Divânschip of Junâgâdzh was again given to the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, through the intervention of Ballantyne Sâheb, who informed the Navâb Sâheb that it was the order of the Sarkâr Company Bahâdur, that he should permanently fix the office of Divân in the family of the Divân Sâheb Amarji. In this year the English Government conquered the fort of Ânjâr, but after some time they restored it to the Râo Sâheb by way of form.

DISMISSAL OF DIVÂN RAGHUNÂTHJI, IMPRISONMENT AND SLAUGHTER OF ATTITS.

Sundarji Khatri, who entertained ambitious designs, instilled into the Navâb’s mind a desire for the recovery of the forts of Dhorâjî, Upletâ, and Mângrol, the remission of a debt of fifty lakhs jâmîs (koris) due to the Mutassaddis, and the restoration of the jâgîr of Bâlâsinor; in this manner he gained over the Navâb to his side and alienated his favour from the Divân Sâheb—

> Whoever came built him a house,
> But went again and left it to another;
> Who likewise acted in the same manner,
> So that the habitation belonged to no one.
In Saṅvat 1874 Sheikh Amrûllah, who was originally an indigo dyer, and who had been allowed by the deceased Divân Sâheb Amarji to establish himself in the town, and who had by his trade in rich Ahmedâbâdi cloths and all kinds of stuffs, gradually wormed himself into the Court of the Navâb Sâheb, and into the favour of the Masâhebah Râj Kunwar, succeeded at last in attaining the rank of companion (Musâheb) to the Navâb Sâheb, and with Mugatrâm Bakhshi was despatched through Sûndarji to Ballantyne Sâheb with a nazarana of twenty-five thousand rupees in order to obtain his permission to put some old Mutasaddis out of the way who were stumbling blocks to the new Divân, and in order that the full and untramelled authority of Divân might devolve on Sûndarji, and Ballantyne Sâheb, who was anxious to advance the interest of Sûndarji by every means in his power, immediately consented, and on the arrival of Amrûllah and Mugatrâm, the Navâb Sâheb threw Mehta Amarji Bin Rudrâji Jhâlâ and Mulchand Hema-trâm Nâgar into prison, on which the Sanyâsis of Śrî Trinetra Mahâdeva and the wine-sellers and Sayyids of Junâgaqâh who were their securities, issued forth from the city and commenced to sit in “dhornâ.”* The Navâb Sâheb sent out Sheikh Amrûllah, Miân Abd-ul-Qâdr, and Jhinâ Mehta.

*This strong expression is wanting in the translation from the Gujarati.
with Mugatrám Bakhshi, to satisfy their demands, but as they would not listen, he sent Shahámat Khán Bâbi, Jamál Khán Baluchi, and others, with armed men to the number of a hundred, to kill them. The Sayyids considered life sweet and honour bitter, accepted terms saying “we seek safety from God,” but they shed the blood of the Sanyásis and wine-sellers except one of them, a strict performer of penance, who was dragged to the Úparkot and slain there.

In fine, since Ballantyne Sâheb was an accomplice in this evil action, he instituted no inquiries regarding it, although he came often to Junâgadh to make new arrangements; once he even invested Prabhudás Nâgar of Bânsârâ with the dress of Diván on his promise to pay one-half of the debt due to the mutasaddis in eight years, by twenty instalments; in the same way he caused the pay of the sipâhis to be liquidated, but Prabhudás was likewise unable to keep the office longer than a week or two.

In Sámvat 1875 (A.D. 1819), on the evening of the 9th Jesht Vâd, such an earthquake took place that high edifices fell down, the surface of the earth burst, and water gushed forth from it, many persons were buried under ruins; and the next day the earth again trembled, and it appears to have been an earthquake felt over the whole world.

The Navâb Sâheb entrusted for the second time Ratansi and Hansraj bin Jethâ Khatri with the collection of the jamabandi in the whole country of Kâthiâwâr, which had fallen into arrears for ten years, in return for their aid in expelling Jamâdâr Omar, though the Divân Raghunâthji had effected this at the cost only of a lakh and a half of rupees.

Sûndarji also, in his desire to obtain the office of Divân, caused an agreement to be made whereby a lakh of jâmîs for vakil’s expenses were settled as an annual payment to the English Gov ernment, and as security ten villages of Jetpûr and 63,000 jâmîs ready money were respectively written over and paid, and the provisions in the bond regarding interest were expunged.

The Divânship of Sûndarji.

Sûndarji Shavji a Khatri had several times come with Ballantyne Sâheb to Junâgaâdh, and in Sâm-vat 1876 he obtained the farm of all the parganahs from the Navâb Sâheb for a period of ten years, on condition of paying an annual sum of nine lakhs of jâmîs, besides defraying the ghanim vero, and Ballantyne Sâheb stood security for him as to the Divânî, and although the said Sûndarji had formerly sworn that he would protect the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, he on this occasion entirely omitted to do so, and even contributed to his being dismissed. Sûndarji left his nephew Hansraj at Junâgaâdh itself to conduct affairs, and administered the state under the protection of Ballantyne Sâheb. In this year the latter also issued a proclamation that the Sarkâr Company Bahâdur, after fighting with him, had extinguished the Government of Šrîmânt Bâji Râo the Peshwâ, which had lasted during one hundred and twenty years at Pûnâ, and had on several occasions vanquished the imperial troops (of the Emperor of Delhi).

Death of the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji.

In Saîmvat 1875, on Ásso Sûd 10th, the Divân Sâheb Raghunâthji, successor to the Divân Amarji, departed to Kailâsa, at the age of 56 years, and many persons who had enjoyed of his bounty for a long time were much distressed. He was a worshipper of Šankara, liberal, brave, upright, veracious, skilled in business, protector of the raiyats, in military affairs, in the mulukgiri expeditions, and in manœuvring the army he cannot be said to have been inferior to the late Amarji. The world bewails his loss, and at Benares several Sanyâsis subsist comfortably at his expense. He built the temple of Srî Bûdhâbâwâ, mentioned in the account of Mângrol, as well as the bathing kûnd called Sarasvatî kûnd, and a dharamsâlâ at Pâtâu, and he caused Gayâtri purshachau to be performed, and the pilgrims who resort to Benares enjoy the allowance of food he has made for them.
Wedding of Kesarbâï.

In Saṁvat 1876 Kesarbâï, daughter of the Râo of Kachh and sister of Rao Sâheb Bhârâ, the Râja of Kachh-Bhuj, was married by the Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân, Bahâdur Bâbi, on which occasion the gates of liberality were opened to the inhabitants of the world and presents were made to dancers, singers, courtesans, story-tellers, Bhâts, Chârans, Faqirs, Sayyids and Sheiks of the surrounding districts. Everybody obtained more than he expected, and many presents consisted of ready money, goods, horses, camels, and rings for feet and hands, made of gold and jewels. Eatables were also distributed, with opium, (drinks) of various kinds and medical confections. Betelnuts, cardamoms, cloves, and spices were distributed in such quantities that the poor folk sold them in the bazâr. From Kachh, furniture was brought with a female elephant, horses, camels, chariots, cows, sheep, male and female slaves, clothing articles of gold embossed with jewels, some of cast and some of hammered gold, and the articles of furniture amounted in value to five lâkhs jámi koris.

After Ballantyne Sâheb, Barnwell Sâheb, with Chotálâl, a Gujarâti Nâgar, who was his divân, came as Political Agent in Kâthiâwâr, and as he happened to be near Jetpûr, he came to the marriage-feast at Junâgaâdh on the invitation of the Navâb Sâheb, on which occasion Hansrâj (nephew of Sûndarji Khatri), made himself very useful by his activity. The above lady lived only four years after her marriage.

Interviews with the General Sâheb (Governor Elphinstone).

In Sâñvat 1876 (A.D. 1820) the marriage of the daughter of Dalpatrâm was celebrated, as well as the vastu (opening) ceremonies, which were performed in the temple of Sarasvatî, at the gate of Hatakâśwar Mahâdev and the four temples built around it. Since, however, I was vexed with the Navâb Sâheb, and as Hansrâj was my enemy, and as Ballantyne Sâheb connived at his conduct and did not reprove him, I went there with my full train to Goghâ. Therefore the author departed with his followers to meet Governor Elphinstone Sâheb, who had recently arrived there. The Governor Sâheb was so polite as to advance forty steps from his private tent to meet me, and on taking leave he accompanied me one hundred steps. Seven chairs were placed for my companions and vakils, and on three occasions he conversed privately with me in a separate apartment in the Persian language for three hours with great kindness and condescension. What words shall I use to express my thanks to so noble and exalted a personage, who was moreover wholly independent in the conduct of affairs, and the like of whom I never saw nor heard of. This world changeth and passeth away. He departed and left a good name behind him. When I went away he assured me of the friendly disposition of the English Sarkar, and told me to be under no apprehensions of injury from any of the rulers of this country, and presented me with costly dresses of honour. After my return to Junagadh, I completed the marriage ceremonies of Kasibâ (the daughter of Dalpatrâm) together with the repast, she being weighed with gold and silver in the handsomest manner. This took place on Maha wad 7th, September 1877.

Capture and Release of Grant Sâheb.

When the Grasia prevailed, Bâwâ Wâlâ, a Kâthi, captured Grant Sâheb on the Koûnâr road, and carried him off into the hills, whether he would or no, as his guest, and for several days took him about the forest and jungle. On that occasion (Major) Barnwell Sâheb, who was coming this way, wrote a letter from Ahmadâbâd to the author without any previous acquaintance, and merely on the strength of my friendship towards the Sarkâr Company Bahâdur, requesting me to effect the release of Grant Sâheb. I immediately despatched one or two men to the outlaws, and they brought me a letter from Grant Sâheb from that place, but as I possessed no acquaintance with the English language, I had recourse to Bhavânidâs, the Munshi of Ballantyne Sâheb, who informed his master of the matter. The Sàheb, afraid lest I should effect his release and thus gain renown, sent Hansrâj with numerous troops, both horse and foot, and obtained the release of Grant Sàheb from captivity in exchange for the parganah of Visâwadar, and in course of time Bâvawâlâ, son of Râning, himself was killed by some of his enemies and Visâwadar reverted to its lawful owners.

Expulsion of Mr. Anderson from Dwarka, and Punishment of the Waghers by the English.

Handy Sàheb (Anderson) and Muhammad Átâ Mûllah were the Thànahdârs of the Company at Dwarka and Beyt, but the Wâghers and Sangrâm Râja of Beyt rebelled and ignominiously expelled them from the fort. In vain did Muhammad Átâ Mûllah shake his beard, the cow-worshipping Wâghers gave them no time to put their shoes on, plain daylight became as dark to them as a midnight of the rainy season, and without reflecting on the disgrace, both Handy Sàheb and Muhammad Átâ Mûllah came and paid their respects to Ballantyne Sàheb at Junâgaîb. Shortly afterwards the English army went and so chastised the Wâghers, that many of them were precipitated into the bottomless pit of annihilation. Râjâ Sangrâm was captured and safely brought to Surat, and was afterwards sent back to his country again with a small pension and bound over to keep the peace; and they slew Mûlû Mânik and many other Wâghers in the Gomti river, and the survivors were treated mercifully and granted their former jâgirs, and this mahâl was bestowed anew on the Gâekwâr.

Chastisement of the Khumân Kâthis by the British.

Jogidas and Hâdo Khûmân and others had for a long time been in outlawry in the country of Râwal Wâkhtsingh, who called the English army to his aid. It was under the command of Stauhope Sâheb, and although its movements were rapid, no stop could be put to the depredations of the rebels, who were at last subdued by the skill of Barnwell Sâheb. He being a man of experience, able to impart wisdom to Loqmân, he took into custody some Kâthis of Jetpûr, who were relations and securities of those outlaws, and Chelâ Khâchar of Jasdân and Harsûr Wâlâ of Bagasrâ, and Dânta Kotîlâ the zamindar of Dedân, and imprisoned them and attached their estates. He also took possession of the fort of Jetpûr and compelled them to produce and surrender the Khûmâns, whom in Saùvat 1882 he handed over to Râwal Wajesingh (of Bhâonagar), and then he restored Jetpûr, Bagasrâ and Jasdan to their former lords.

Barnwell Sâheb, one of whose innate qualities was to bestow favours, procured for the author in Saùvat 1878, the farm of the tâlukâs of Râjkot and Sardár, to be held for seven years (for a fixed rent), and in Saḿvat 1880 he procured for me the farm of Dhorāji and Upleta, and Mehtā Amarlāł and Raghunāthji Vasāvaḍa were appointed managers on my behalf.

In Saḿvat 1879 Sůndarji Khatrī, who had just returned from a pilgrimage to Haridwār, died at the port of Mândvi in his own house. His nephews Hansrāj and Ratanéi, who managed the affairs of Junāgaḍh and of Bhûj, in the pride of their prosperity, cared very little for the Navāb Sāheb or the Jâm Sāheb, they sat on an equality with them in the darbâr, and tyrannically robbed the helpless raiyats of much gold, and despised the Nâgars now when their patron (Ballantyne Sâheb) was removed from Kâthiâwâr and obtained an appointment at Sâdrâ as Political Agent, and as the Navâb was not successful in regaining the jâgir of Bâlásinor, of which Sůndarji had held him out hopes, and on which account Sůndarji had taken from him much cash, articles of value and beautiful horses; in consequence of this a great enmity sprang up between them and Leeson Sâheb, and Anderson Sâheb giving Hansrāj an agreement from the Navâb to pay his demands by instalments, expelled him from the town. On hearing this, his brother Ratanéi came from Bhûj and spent much money, but could not make peace between them. And if the English had not been their securities, they would have fared ill. Immediately after his expulsion from Junâ-gâdh, Hansrâj obtained from the Jâm Sâheb the farm of the Nawâ nagar estate for a period of ten years, in consideration for an annual payment of seventeen läkhs and thirty thousand jâmi koris, and he received much assistance from Barnwell Sâheb. Hansrâj and Devshi claimed from the Jâm twenty-eight läkhs of jâmi koris on account of the nazaraâna of eight läkhs and fifty thousand rupees which they had agreed to pay the English Government on account of Joâia and Balambhâ.

In Saânvat 1885, when Blane Sâheb was appointed Political Agent, who could not distinguish between truth and falsehood, and who was of a very harsh and self-willed disposition, Hansraj lost much both by the farm and his other accounts. In short, he was disgraced, and since he had been occupied in farming and managing districts, his private trade had passed to other hands. The crow, in trying to walk like the partridge, forgets his own mode of progression. Mr. Blane now rooted out all the Khatris and withdrew the security and promises of the Company Bahâdur both from them and others in the Kâthiâwâr zillah, who had been relying in safety on the English Government.

Afterwards, since the change of Barnwell Sâheb, the officials of the English Government who have come to this zillah (whether Europeans or Hindus) are indeed our friends, but not the friends of justice.

Expect not fidelity from bulbuls,
They every moment other roses court.

Death of Kesarabâi, and murder of Ahmad Khân Faqir.

Kesarabâi, the sister of the Rão Sâheb Bhârâ and spouse of the Navâb Sâheb Bahâdur Khân, departed about this time to the regions of Paradise.

Ahmad Faqir, a disciple of Mohkim-ud-din Panjâbi, happened by the decree of God to ingratiate himself so much with the Navâb Sâheb that he began soon to address him as his spiritual director and his aib/ah, politely bowing to him all the while in every conversation; by degrees however Makhdum Miân Chishti Ismail Khân, Sayyid Karwâ, and Fateh Khân entered into a conspiracy to ruin him. They brought Dâvâsi bin Sundarji, who possessed the nature of a devil, with Sundarji Sangvi, who excelled Kalelah and Demnah in acuteness, and Sayyid Karwâ from Râjkoṭ to Junâgaḍh, and induced them to murder Ahmad Khân (because he had been concerned in the dismissal of Sêṭh Sundarji from the Karbariship of Junâgaḍh). The murder of Ahmad Khân was perpetrated on the 4th Muharram A.H. 1240 (Samvat 1880), and as a punishment for it, Che-lah Esma'yl Khan and Kadava were one year afterwards expelled from the town; Makhdūm Chisith was, after a captivity of one year, compelled to pay a fine of sixty thousand jami (koris), and after giving securities, was allowed to depart to Nagar; but Fateh Khan suffered capital punishment.

Events of Samvat 1880.

The General Sāheb met the Navāb Sāheb (in Samvat 1880) at Kātharota, and as the author was farming the revenues of Dhorāji and Upētā, he also obtained the felicity of an interview on the 14th of Māhavad.

After the murder of Ahmad Khan, his son Yusuf Khan received two villages as an inām from the Navāb Sāheb, and went to his watan, but Dēvāsi Seth returned unsuccessfully to Rājkot; but Miān Hasan bin Nathu Miān, who was also one of the disciples of Mohkim-ud-din, attained the dignity of spiritual director to the Navāb, and gained over Sundarji Sangvi to his side, and administered the affairs of State on his own account. Meanwhile Miān Kamar-ud-din, the successor of Barā Sāheb, who had been the spiritual guide [pir] of the Bābī dynasty, fell into neglect; and the Navāb Sāheb became very fond of listening to songs and music, of dancing, drinking, eating forbidden things, associating with rosy-cheeked women, and attending combats of buffaloes and rams; often changed his servants, and allowed Hasan Miyân and his vakils to administer the affairs of State sitting in some shop in the bazâr. Lastly, Lakshmidâs Seth, Khushâl Chamaurai, and Bhûpat Râi Deśâi, and Govardhan Seth and the sipâhis who were followers of Ahmad Khân, were kept for two months in prison.

Mehta Govindji bin Amarji bin Rûdraji Jhâlâ, a Nâgâr, was formerly the Mutasaddi of Mân-grol and Kesod. Ahmad Khân, considering him a fit puppet, caused him to be appointed Divân in Sansâvat 1881, but he administered affairs dishonourably, and thought solely of amassing money.

Highway robbers from their haunts about Mount Gîrnâr, infested the pargana of Hâlâr and Dhorâji, the inhabitants of which they plundered. They also ravaged the place of the Atits of Śrî Trînētera Mahâdēva, which from ancient times is the ornament and honour of this country, and under the direction of Ahmad Khân, Hamir the Sindhi robber got hold of many lakhs worth of plunder from the monastery. Kaliângar, the helpless mâhânt of this monastery, being reduced to great distress by these depredations, preferred his complaints to Captain Barnwell, but the sowârs of the Navâb Sâheb, with several Atits who had a dispute about their hereditary property, pursued him and brought back Kaliângar, having captured him near Dhorâji.
These complaints Barnwell Sâheb sent me from Dhorâji. I at once sent a hundred men to their aid, and rescuing Kaliângar from Jâmâwar, where he was kept a prisoner, I sent him to Râjkot.

Barnwell Sâheb, being apprised of these disturbances, despatched Captain Wilson Sâheb with a regiment to overawe Junâgađh, in the vicinity whereof it remained encamped for two or three months, and at last the Navâb Sâheb went himself in person to Wânthâli, agreed to restore the property taken by the robbers (from the temple) and to pay a fine of six lakhs and eighty-five thousand jami koris.

At that time the news arrived that English troops from Madras and Calcutta were invading the Kâmrâp country, known as Barmâ, and situated between Calcutta and China, where the inhabitants profess the Buddhist religion. At the first battle, the army took possession of Rângun, but on account of the great mountains, brambles, sorcery, epidemic diseases, and the consequent difficulty of carrying on war, they returned after having conquered a portion of that country.

Ranjit Singh the Sikh first conquered Multân and afterwards Kashmir and Ātak by the strength of the sword; he had also occupied Kâbul and Peshâwar, but was unable to keep them.

Some freebooters of the Miyânâ people of Sindh invaded Kachh under their commander Fateh Ali, who on hearing that the English Sârkâr intended to march troops against him, despatched his vakils to Bombay and sued for peace.

In Sânvat 1881 so great a famine raged, that beasts went in search of grass to the meadows of the king of death, and many human beings died from want of bread and emaciation. In this year also the excellent and high-minded youth Šambhu-prasâd, who was the shining lamp of us three brothers, withered away from the fierce wind of death on 5th of Jêshth sudh; but man is unable to contend with fate.

In the year 1882 Govindji Jhâlå (whom Ahmad Khân had always been in the habit of addressing insoltingly and replying to reproachfully, and who had, moreover, fallen into disgrace and oblivion like an owl), now after the murder of Ahmad Khân, and through the recommendation of Barnwell and Blane Sâhebs, as well as by the good pleasure of the Navâb Sâheb, obtained for the second time a contract for the farm of the revenues of Junâgaôdh for ten years under the guarantee of the Company Bahâdur. Some time afterwards, however, the Navâb Sâheb was displeased because the raiyats were oppressed by Govindji Jhâlå, and at the advice of Hasan Miân Darvesh, he despatched Latif Miyân Bûkhâri and Sayyid-walan Miyân from Kodinâr as his vakils to Bombay, for the purpose of complaining and making the Sarkâr acquainted with all the doings of Govindji Jhâlå, and the author was likewise sent for to the Navâb Sâheb’s presence.
At the time of the marriage of Lakshmiśankar, the light of my eyes and son of Sambhuprasād, the Navāb Sāheb Bahādur Khān conferred an everlasting honour on me by making his appearance in the assembly, and Langford Sāheb, although he had but recently arrived, was nevertheless, by his innate generosity, impelled to be present. Langford Sāheb was very painstaking, and so valiant that his mere arrival was sufficient to put a stop to robberies, and his praiseworthy behaviour is deserving of the thanks of all the people, whose unfortunate fate it was that he departed soon; but I heard that on account of the jealousy of some English Sāheb he did not prosper in the service of the Company Bahādur.

In course of time Hasan Miyān again became reconciled to Jhālā Govindji, and he again made peace between him and the Navāb Sāheb.

After the death of the wife of Barnwell Sāheb he was much grieved and departed to the Cape, whence he proceeded in Saṁvat 1885 to England by the permission of Governor Malcolm, whilst Blane Sāheb, who had been a subordinate of his, took his place after he had departed, and substituted for the patience and good manners of Barnwell Sāheb, his own silly talk and ill-humour. At last, however, he had an attack of erysipelas, for the purpose of curing which—nay, rather to cure the heart-ache of the poor raiyats of Sorath—he departed to Surat, and thence to Europe.

In Saṁvat 1886, when Blane Sāheb became ruler over the country, he did not allow the justice of the English Sarkâr to take its course, so that the people were distressed and sent their complaints to Bombay, but on account of Newnham Sâheb's friendship for Blane Sâheb no one would listen to them, and on account of the departure of Governor Elphinstone Sâheb Bahâdur—may his prosperity endure for ever—also a great calamity befell those who sought redress for their grievances. Thus, for instance, the vakil of the author, although he had a personal interview with the Governor Malcolm Sâheb and wrote several petitions, yet never received any reply. However, what has happened has happened, and now I have but a short time to live.

On the occasion of the marriage of the Jâm Sâheb Rânjâmâji to the daughter of Râval Wajesingh, râjâ of Bhâvnagar, the author sent a troop of fifty sowârs and a chariot with Lakshmisankar and Šankarpasâd, who were during two months and a half treated in the kindest manner by the Jâm Sâheb—may God increase his prosperity! Their return cheered my saddened heart. Now, oh Ranchorji, give up telling these idle tales. The world is nothing but a dream or passing thought. They who have died have left nothing behind them but a name. I also must die and leave all, and nothing but a good name endures for ever. Be satisfied, then, be satisfied with contemplating the perfections of that God who is everlasting, immovable, and immortal.
End of the History of Junâgâdh.

The following additional circumstances I add to this book.

In Śaṁvat 1885 Lâdunâth Jogi, whom the Râjâ Mânsinghji of Mârwâr considered his spiritual preceptor, came to adore Gorakhnâth, accompanied by a band of three or four thousand horsemen and footmen and tents and cannon. He went to Gôrâkha-mâdi with 200 chosen camel sowars, and performed the requisite circumambulations of the shrine, and bringing Pîrnâth, the abbot of that place, with him to Junâgâdh, he presented him with an elephant and then he returned to his own country; but when he reached the zillah of Becharâji on his way thither, he died.

In Śaṁvat 1890 the Navâb Sâheb sent for Sadâshiv Râo, son of the Dakhani Divân, from Ahmadâbâd by means of Nânâ Miyan, and went to meet him on his arrival as far as the Sardâr Bâgh and handed over to him the ministry. He also seated Sadâshiv Râo beside him on his own elephant, and in this year (Śaṁvat 1890) Rânâ Vikmâtji came with his mother to perform the pilgrimage to Gîrnâr, and had an interview with the Navâb Sâheb and presented a horse as nazarânah. The Navâb Sâheb also visited him at his house, which was that of Raghunâth Râî. And it so befell that the Navâb Sâheb died suddenly, from a carbuncle which appeared on his rump, on Wednesday, Vaisâkha vad 1st, Śaṁvat 1896, corresponding to the 24th of Rabî-ul-Â‘wal, A.H.
CAPTAIN GRANT.

1256. He was an excellent man, and his reign lasted for 29 years and 22 days, and his age at his death was 44 years and 10 months and 22 days.

Note on p. 222.

The following is Captain Grant's own narrative of his captivity:

"In 1813 I was appointed by the Bombay Government, at the request of Captain Carnac, Resident of Baroda, to the command of the naval force then established by His Highness the Gaikvâdë for the suppression of the Indian and Arabian pirates that infested the coasts of Kâthiâvâd and Kachh. We captured and destroyed several; and in 1820 they were so much reduced that the Gaikvâd abolished his naval establishment, not considering it necessary to keep it up any longer. I then received orders to proceed inland from my station at Velan Bandar, or Diu Head, to Amrâľ, to deliver over charge of my vessels to the Gaikvâdë's Sarsubha, or Diwân, in Kâthiâvâd. On my way I was attacked by a bâharwati, or outlaw Kâthi, named Bâwâwallâ, with thirty-five horsemen. My horsekeeper was killed; my munshi severely wounded. I could not myself make any resistance, having only a riding whip.

"On first coming up, Bâwâwallâ said that he wanted to consult me about his affairs, and on this pretext got me to dismount. My people being rendered helpless, I was forced to remount my horse and gallop off with the gang, who took me into a large jungle, called the Gir, where I was kept prisoner on the top of a mountain for two months and seventeen days. During the whole of this time two armed men with swords drawn kept guard over me. I laid among the rocks drenched with rain night and day, with the exception of two nights, when the gang forced me to accompany them, and we stopped in a friendly village. In this expedition I was occasionally allowed to ride, but always surrounded by a strong band, that made all attempt to escape impossible. In one village, where the people favoured Bûwâwallâ, the women took my part and upbraided him and his men for my cruel treatment. Towards unfriendly villages the custom of the gang was to ride up to the gates and chop off the heads of little boys at play, and then go off rejoicing and laughing at their cursed exploits. When they returned to the encampment after a day's murdering foray, the young Kâthîs used to boast how many men they had killed; and one day I heard the old fellows questioning them rather particularly whether or not they were sure they had killed their victims. 'Yes,' they said; 'they had seen their spears through them, and were certain they were dead.' 'Ah!' remarked an old Kâthî, 'a human being is worse to kill than any other animal; never be sure they are dead till you see the body on one side of the road and the head on the other.'

"At times the Chief Bûwâwallâ, in a state of stupor from opium, would come and sit by my side, and holding his dagger over me, ask how many stabs it would take to kill me. I said I thought one would do, and I hoped he would put me out of misery. 'I suppose you think,' he would answer, 'that I won't kill you; I have killed as many human beings as ever fisherman killed fish, and I should think nothing of putting an end to you; but I shall keep you awhile yet, till I see if your Government will get me back my property; if so, I will let you off.'"
"When not out plundering, the gang slept most of the day. At night the halter of each horse was tied to its master's arm. When the animals heard voices they tugged, and the men were up in an instant. Their meals consisted of bâjri cakes with chillis, and milk when it could be got. I used to have the same.
Once or twice my servant was allowed to come to me,
and brought the rare treat of some curry and a bottle of claret from Captain Ballantine. The wine Bâwâ-wallâ seized on at once, thinking it was dâru, or spirits, but on tasting the liquor he changed his mind, and spitting it out declared it was poison, sent, no doubt, on purpose to kill him. By way of test, I was ordered to drink it, which I did with great pleasure, and finding me none the worse, he gave up his idea of poison.

"Among his people there were two young men who showed some feeling for me. One of these was shot on a pillaging raid shortly before my release. They used to try and cheer me up by telling me I should be set free. Occasionally, when opportunity offered, they would inform me how many people they had killed, and the method they pursued when rich travellers refused the sum demanded. This was to tie the poor wretches by their legs to a beam across a well, with their heads touching the water, and then to saw away at the rope until the tortured victims agreed to their demands, then the Kâthîs would haul them up, get from them a hundi or bill on some agent, and keep them prisoners till this was paid.

"Sometimes they told me of their master's intention to murder me, which was not pleasant. He and his men had many disputes about me, just as his hopes or fears of the consequence of my imprisonment prevailed.
"I can never forget one stormy night: they were all sitting round a great fire; I lay behind them. Lions and wild beasts roared around us, but did not prevent me overhearing a debate upon the subject of what should be done with me. The men complained that they had been two months in the jungle on my account; their families were in the villages, very badly off for food, and that they would stay no longer. Their chief replied: 'Let us kill him, and flee to some other part of the country.' To this they objected, saying that the English would send troops and take their families prisoners and ill use them. So in the end it was agreed to keep me for the present.

"My release was effected at last through our Political Agent, Captain Ballantine, who prevailed on the Navâb of Junâgâdh to use his influence to get another Kathi who had forcibly taken Bâwâwallâ's pargana or district to restore it to him, and Bâwâwallâ thus having gained his object, set me free.

"My sufferings during confinement were almost beyond endurance, and I used to pray in the evening that I might never see another morning. I had my boots on my feet for the first month, not being able to get them off from the constant wet until I was reduced by sickness. Severe fever, with ague and inflammation of the liver, came on, and, with exposure to the open air, drove me delirious, so that when let go I was found wandering in the fields at night covered with vermin from head to foot. I shall never forget the heavenly sensation of the hot bath and clean clothes I got in the tent of the Navâb of Junâgâdh's Divan, the officer who accomplished my release. The fever and ague, then contracted, continued on me for five years, and the ill effects still remain, my head being at times greatly troubled with giddiness, and I have severe fits of ague; my memory also is much affected, but I can never forget the foregoing incidents, though it is now upwards of fifty years since they occurred.*

"G. Grant.

"Barholm House, Creetown, N.B., April 1871."

---

* From General Sir G. LeGrand Jacob's Western India, before and during the Mutinies, pp. 108ff.
CONCERNING THE HISTORY OF NAGAR.

Hâlâr is a separate country. Although it is not included among the tributaries of the Sorath Sarkâr, nevertheless the imperial functionaries came from Junâgaâdh to Nagar to levy the tribute and the Bâdshâhi vero. The tâlûkâs of Dhrâl and Rajkot and the villages of the Gondal estate, pay khiraj, since the time of Sher Khân, who had the title of Bahâdur Khân, and the Divân Sâheb Amarji, and I will relate to those who care to listen to such histories some account of those places.

CONCERNING THE Jâm.

In past times the Khalifah of Bâghdâd, Hajjâj by name, led an army against Sindh in a religious war. In this campaign Dharasena, the Brûhman chief of the province of Thâthâ, was slain in battle, and the Muhammadan religion was established by force and violence throughout the country of Sindh. They who did not wish to adopt the new religion and yet were not sufficiently strong to oppose it, agreed to submit, and after the rule of the Sûmâs, Anirâo Samâ became, in St. 1340 (A.D. 1283-84), the ruler of Sindh. Of these, the Jâdejâ Rajputs, who originally are of the Jâdav stock, entering the country of Kachh, conquered Bhuj by force of arms, and residing there, ruled the country and erected numerous forts in all directions, and one thousand, four hundred, and forty villages are within their rule. Jâm Lâkhan brought the whole of Kachh under his rule; but since I am the historian of Hâlâr, I will begin with Jâm Râvâl, the founder of Nagar.

Jâm Lâkhan crossed the Raç from Bhandevâr, which was his capital, with a powerful army. The râjâ of Soraţh came to oppose him, but the Jâm defeated him and drove him back. At this time Sultân Bâhâdur Shâh summoned the Jâm to his presence, and placing him in command of his own army, sent him to conquer Pâwâgaâdh, which he did, and as a reward for it, was presented with the parganas of Kûnâd, Ámbaran, with 12 villages in each, and Morbi. The Jâm Lâkha offered for this a nazâr of some Kachhi horses and one hundred Ashrafis, and marching back to his country was treacherously slain near a place called Ambaran, by the zamindar thereof, whose name was Tamâchi Dâdâ, and who committed the deed like a robber by entering his tent in the middle of the night.

His son Jâm Râvâl, to avenge his death, slew Tamâchi and then killed Parmâl Châvadâ, and took Dhol, and Haradhol, after slaying also Nâg Jethvâ, took possession of Nâganâr, near Navânagar. Then he devoted himself during sixteen years to the cultivation and settlement of his country. He also conquered the town of Bakoûtâ.

Jâm Râvâl bîn Lâkha bîn Haradhol slew his uncle Hamir, and himself ascended the throne.
On account of this wicked deed his subjects, amîrs, and relatives hated him, and Râo Khêngâr, the son of Hamîr, desirous to avenge the murder of his father, called to his aid Sultân Mahmud Gujarâti, which compelled Jâm Râval, when the Muhammedan army was approaching, to seek the protection of Ásâpûrî Mâtâ. He was thinking of making an offering of his own head to the Mâtâ, whose shrine is as glorious as heaven, when he heard the voice of an invisible angel exclaim—

"To thee do I the land of Hálûr give,
From thee the land of Kachh I take."

Encouraged by this message, he collected his friends and followers, who amounted to nearly a hundred thousand and were of various Râjput tribes, such as Jâdéjâ, Lâdak, Hudhan, Dhemân, Châran, Dâl, and Wagher, with whom he crossed the Salt-Ran and encamped before Morbi, on this side of the Ran, which had been given to his family on account of the conquest of Pâwâgadh and the surrender of Sultân Muzaffar by Râo Bhârâ, and advancing thence he halted in the parganahs of Âmbran, Bâlambhâ, and Jodiâ.

The whole of the province was in the hands of different râjâs. The Jêthwâs ruled as far as Nâghnâh, distant about a kos from Nagar; the Dôdâs and Châvaîa Râjputs prevailed as far as the Machhu River; and the rule of the Vâdheî Râjputs, as zamindârs, extended to the village of Khambhâliya; and as far as Kâlâwaq was possessed by Kâthîs under Jûnâgaḍh; and all plundered in every direction for several years.

As all the zamindars united to oppose him, Jâm Râval marched against them, and drew up his van, centre, rear, and right and left wings in an excellent manner, and selecting a favourable moment to engage, he said to his comrades, “I will this day place my head under a crown or under a sword.” Then after strenuous efforts and the display of great bravery and activity, he gained the day, driving back the Kâthis to the river Bhâdar, and the Jêthwâs to the salt creek of Bhokirâ, and the Dedâs and Châvâdâs to the river Machhû, and he forced the Vâdhels to cross the Okhâ Râñ, and thus obtained the country without any shareholder or partner.

Verse.

“The land is a tablecloth which belongs to whom God willeth,

And at this table both friend and enemy may partake.”

Founding of the City of Navânagar.

The city of Navânagar was founded on Wednesday, the 8th of the light half of Shrâvan, in Samvat 1596, on the banks of the Rangamati and Nâgamati rivers, at a distance of two kos from the ocean, during the reign of the Emperor Humâiyûn of Delhi and of Sultân Mahmûd bin Muhammad Shâh, of Gújarât.
At that time Sultan Ahmad laid siege to Junagadh; and Rao Mandlik, being occupied with his own troubles, was not able to attend to anything else. In course of time the city began to prosper, and all kinds of artisans crowded to it. At present it is celebrated for its various textile fabrics, such as turbans, head-dresses, dhotis, and petticoats, which are exported to different countries by merchants. Here also silk stuffs, like those made at Ahmadabad and Surat, called mashru, atlas, and panchpat, are produced. Here also painters, dyers, workers in shells, engravers, embroiderers, and tailors produce exquisite articles. This place abounds with kitchen and flower gardens; and in the latter also plants are reared from which essential oils and perfumes, e.g. attar and water of roses, champeli and moghara, are prepared and in great quantities exported to distant countries. In the bazar all kinds of produce, green and dry, living and dead, is exposed for sale.

Here are Brâhmans who read the Vedas, and are distinguished by science, virtue, and kindness; they are preachers, readers of the Puranas, perform religious ceremonies, and the Agnihotri sacrifice. Among the other inhabitants the Bohorais, Khattris, and Bhâtias engage in their respective occupations, whilst the Sêkás, Maliks, Râjput Jhâlas, and Sodhâ Vatandars constitute a most respectable portion of the community.

The chief ornaments of this place are the temples of Nâganâth, Bhîdabhanjan, Jagannâtha, Hat-keśvar, Jámnātha, Ranchoḍrāi, and Kal-lyânji, the monastery of the Gokali Gosāins, and the temples of the Jains and tombs of many Bohoras. The talāo called Jâmsâr, to the west of the city, is always overflowing with sweet water. Four kos from the city on the seashore is the temple of Roji Mātā, which is both strong and famous.

The inhabitants all dress well, have a pleasing complexion, are intelligent, and the beauty of the women is so seductive, that even his lordship the Qâzi and the Sheikh-al-Mashâïkh agitate their beards and sing the following Ghazal aloud:—

The dead why worship? Purity is here;
Why doubt? come to the Ka’bah, God is here;
The Kâbah, but of stone and loam you see,
Now come, adore an idol: here it is,—
I searched the world’s book-case from leaf to leaf,
I saw your mark, and said this is my hope.
The Kâbah and the Zem-zem was a trope,
Its truth a pure heart is, such is my hope.
When God did give to man a shape, his own,
He said:—How pure his heart, our place is here,
In this garden I am each blossom’s friend,
Here hope to find the scent of amity,
To this threshold bow your head, O Āḥmad,
Because each king a beggar here becomes.

According to the saying "the people follow the religion of their kings," the adherents of Islâm generally shave their beards, abandon the worship of tombs, throw about colour at the Holi, and use the Râm-Râm salutation. Lastly, the city of Nagar is the ornament of the whole State, and is under the special protection of Śankar, who is the giver of all good gifts. Hardholji, brother of Jâm Râval, who slew Dhamal Châvaḍa, colonised the town of Dhrol.

Jâm Râval bin Lâkhâ bin Hardhol.

This Jâm was well known for his liberality, and reigned twenty-one years. His eldest son, Jayâji, lost his life by falling from a horse in the plain, near Roji Mâtâ’s temple. Jayâji’s son Lâkhâ, who was still a minor, received the parganah of Khilos in girâs, and his uncle Vîbhâjî became râjâ.

Jâm Vîbhâjî bin Jâm Râval.

This prince began to reign on the 11th Kartik sud, Sâmvat 1618 (A.D. 1561), and died seven years and three months afterwards.

Jâm Satrasâl bin Vîbhâjî.

Jâm Satrasâl bin Vîbhâjî ascended the masnad of his father in Sâmvat 1625, on the 14th of Mahâ vad, and was allowed to coin money by Sultân Muzaffar, whose name it bore; but he ordered it to be called Mâhmudi, after his father. The permission was obtained in the following way:—On a certain occasion the Jâm presented a rupee to the Sultân with a kori as nazarânah, and said:— “In the same way as the dignity of râjâs is augmented by giving their daughters to His Majesty the Sultân, so I wed my ‘Kânwari’ to this rupee in the hope that her honour will increase.” The Sultân was pleased with this sally, issued the permission for coining this money, and ordered it to be called kúnwari in the Hindu language, and by the mispronunciation of the vulgar, it is now called kori. It is said that Jâm Satâji lived and ruled with independence, pomp, and splendour. During his time, Daulat Khân, son of Ámin Khân, the Mutasaddi of Junâgaḏh, revolted from the Pâdshâh Akbar of Delhi, who despatched an army to coerce him, which arrived at the fort of Junâgaḏh, and when Daulat Khân was hard pressed he begged aid of Jâm Sârâsâl. The Jâm Sâheb, whose fortune was in the ascendant, and who was desirous of an opportunity like this, sent his Kûnwar Bhârâji and Bhâijji Dal and Jasâ Vazir and Loma Khûmân the Kâthi, with 12,000 brave Râjpût horsemen to his aid. When the army of the Jâm had camped at Majevaḏi, about four kos from Junâgaḏh, Daulat Khân became alarmed, and began to think that it was not wise to trust to those who were desirous of gaining land, lest—God forbid—they should enter the city, and he should afterwards be unable to make them leave it. He therefore made apologies to his ally, whom he informed that he intended to negotiate for peace with the imperial army, and requested him to return to his own country. This news was most unpalatable to Kûnwar Bhârâji, who at once attacked the Delhi army on his own account, defeated it, and took a large booty, consisting of 52 elephants, 3,530 horses, 70 palanquins, many tents, cannon, and all kinds of arms. The next day he marched against Daulat Khân, who had broken his word, and who was so unable to offer resistance that he sued for peace through the Sayyids and Bhâts, and obtained it on giving up the parganahs of Chûr, Jodhpûr, and Bhoâd, containing 12 villages each. In this way he averted further misfortunes from himself. At this time Sulțân Muzaffar Gûjarâtî was fleeing from the Emperor Akbar’s army and arrived in the country of Sorath, with a view of obtaining aid from Jâm Satâjî, Daulat Khân, and Râjâ Khengâr, who was the zamindâr of Sorâth; and raised an army from them of 30,000 cavalry and 20,000 infantry, and created confusion in the district near Ahmadâbâd. On this occasion the Khân A zam Gokaltâsh was appointed in place of the Khân Khânân as the Subahdâr of Ahmadâbâd. He marched to encounter Muzaffar, and encamping at Viramgâm, he despatched Naurauz Khân with Sayyid Kâsim and troops to Morbi, whence they sent letters to the Jâm to the effect that he should expel Sulțân Muzaffar from his country. The Jâm however had the honour of his army too much at heart to comply, but, on the contrary, began to harass the imperial army by cutting off its supplies, and by killing stragglers, and carrying off horses and elephants whenever he could, so that at last one ser of corn was sold for a rupee in the camp.

Now, however, the Khân A zam, with his own special forces, joined the main body. On account of the rain, mud, and the inequality of the ground, the imperial army was deprived of the chance of fighting a pitched battle, accordingly it was determined to march on Nagar, because the Jâm kept all his stores there, and in trying to defend them would be compelled to offer battle. Accordingly the army was put in motion, and when it had arrived in the qasbâ of Dhról, the Jâm made his appearance with the auxiliary forces of Râo Bhârâji of Kachh, and several skirmishes were fought, in each of which the Jâm was victorious. Lomâ Khûmân the Kâthi had on a former occasion, in the campaign of Jûnâgâdh, kept an elephant for himself, taken from the booty of the imperial army, and had on this account been much annoyed by Jasâ Vazir, and thus bore a grudge towards the Jâm, as was also the case with Daulat Khân of Jûnâgâdh, whom the Jâm had now called to his aid, and who likewise fancied that he had suffered some wrong,—

If a man’s evil day has arrived,
He will do what ought not to be done.

A fellow-feeling made these two individuals friends; accordingly they communicated with the Khân Âzam Gokaltâsh, and made an arrangement to bring the army of the Jâm into trouble by deserting it at the moment of onset. The enemy was greatly pleased with the news, and when the fight began, both Lomâ and Daulat Khân loosed the reins of their horses and fled. This sight so discouraged the Jâm, that he likewise alighted from his elephant, mounted a fleet horse, and fled for his life. Jasâ Vazir, however, succeeded with great trouble in maintaining his position till evening; he also guarded the household and the ladies of the Jâm, whom he placed in ships and despatched by sea, to escape being captured, and afterwards all returned to Nagar.

Preparations for the wedding feast of Kûnwar Ajâji were being made at Nagar, and therefore he had remained in the town. Being now vexed at his father’s flight, he quickly mounted and joined the army in the field. On the second day, when the brilliant diadem of heaven shone from the firmament, the two armies encountered each other. The right wing of the imperial army was led by Sayyid Kâsim, Naurang, and Gûjar Khân; and the left by Muhammad Rafi, who was a celebrated general, with several imperial Amirs and Zamindars. Mirza Marhûm, son of Navâb Azim Humâyun, commanded the centre, and before him Mirza Anwar and the Navâb himself took their post. The van of the army of the Jâm was commanded by Jasâ Vazir, Kûnvar Ajâji, and Mehrâmanji Dungarâni. A cannonade from both armies opened the combat, and the imperial warriors as well as the Râjputs fought so well that the angels of heaven applauded their bravery. Muhammad Rafi assailed the army of the Jâm with his battalions, whilst Gûjar Khân and Mirza Anwar, the Navâb of high dignity, attacked Kûnvar Ajâji, Jasâ Vazir, and a company of 1,500 Atits, who were going on pilgrimage to Hîṅgâlâj Dêvî, and who had on their way joined the army of the Jâm; and these fifteen hundred perished, together with Kûnvar Ajâji and Jasâ Vazir, whilst of the imperial army Muhammad Rafî, Sayyid Sharf-ud-dîn, Sayyid Kabir, Sayyid Ali Khân, and others, amounting to two hundred men, were slain and 500 wounded; and of the Jâm's army 700 horses were disabled and all the treasure plundered. This battle was fought on the 8th Áso sud, Saṁvat 1648, or the 6th Rajab A.H. 1001. After this unexpected victory, the imperial army also conquered Junâgaḍh, Patandev, Dwârkâ, and the island of Šankhodwârâ. The imperial army now took up the pursuit of Sultân Mûzâffar, who had fled to the country of Kâchh to Vasta-Bandar, when the imperial army had crossed the Raṅ Râo Bhârâ then surrendered Mûzâffar to the imperial servants in exchange for the parganah of Môtâbî, but Sultân Mûzâffar committed suicide by cutting his throat, and thus died.

The reign of Jâm Sâtrasâl alias Satâji lasted 47 years, 3 months, and 18 days. He gave Gondâl to his younger (third) son, Vîbhâjî, which was lying waste, and Râjkoṭ in lieu of Kâlâvar; and Vîbhâjî's descendants are still called Vîbhûnîs.

Jâm Jasâji, second son of Jâm Satâji.

Jâm Jasâji was for some time kept under surveillance in the capital of Dehli, because, after the death of Kûnvar Ajúji, Jâm Satrasâl remained in Nagar in a subordinate position, and an imperial deputy administered the government of Nagar in concert with him. Jâm Jasâji, therefore, in the hope of winning the imperial favour and removing the annoyance of the deputy, went to Delhi, and by the protection and kindness of the Emperor’s wife, Jahânârâ Begam, and the good offices of Raghunâthji Nâgar, the Bakhshi, was installed on the masnad of Navânagar on the 1st Phâlgun sud, in Saṁvat 1673, and in the year 1675, when Nûr-u’l-din Jahângir Pâdshâh visited Dohad, which is on the frontier of Gujarât, Jâm Jasâji obtained the honour of an audience. On this occasion he offered fifty Kachhi horses and 100 gold mohars to the emperor, from whom he received in return two elephants, two horses, and four rings set with diamonds. During his reign the Śrâvaks repaired a temple in the bazâr.

It happened that during a rainy night the Jâm was playing chess with his Jhâli Rânjâ, who was the daughter of Râjâ Chandrasingh, and displeased her in the game by taking a knight, whereon the rânjâ said:—“What manliness is there in taking a lifeless horse from the hands of a woman? Let him who boasts of his valour take a horse from my father!” This speech so vexed the Jâm that he immediately sent a large and well equipped army against the râjâ. The troops of the Jâm and of the Râjâ of Halawaḍ fought for six months with each other without any decisive result. Seeing he could effect nothing, the Jâm became helpless, and accordingly he despatched Sankardâs Nâgar, the Thânâdâr of Rânâvâv, a brave soldier, to the seat of war, with the promise of a great reward if he could bring this affair to a happy end. Sankardâs went to Halawaḍ, and pretending to come on an errand of condolence to the râjâ, whose son had died, wrapped himself in a sheet, and made his entrance into Halawaḍ with 400 sowars during the evening repast of the chokidârs—a time when they are off their guard. He entered the apartment of the râjâ when he happened to be asleep, and putting a dagger to his breast, awoke him. The râjâ was in fear of his life; his mother, who was present, interceded with Sankardâs, but the latter carried him to the Jâm. When the râjâ arrived, the Jâm smiled and said:—“You are welcome.” He replied: “Sankardâs the Nâgar, who is a Brâhman, has outwitted me, and indeed it is no disgrace if we Râjputs are outwitted by Brâhmans.” It was the intention of the Jâm Sâheb to keep the râjâ prisoner, but Sankardâs, who had made a promise to his mother to bring him back, begged that he might be excused. Hereon the Jâm issued orders to kill Sankardâs, the son of Dâmôdar. The latter, however, by his quickness and the force of his sword, succeeded with his followers in carrying the râjâ safely back to Halawaḍ, but was himself slain, with all his followers; and the truth of the proverb that the company of princes is like that of lions, was again confirmed. Jâm Jâsâjî spent much time in travelling. His reign lasted nominally for eight years, when his Jhâli Rânî gave him poison, and thus deprived him of both his crown and his life.

Jâm Lâkha bin Ajâjî.
He began to reign on the 30th Mahâvad, in Saṃvat 1681; he reigned 21 years, 1 month, and 10 days. In his time Sulṭân Nûr-u’d-din Jahângîr ruled at Delhi.

Jâm Ranâmalji bin Lâkhâ.
His reign commenced on the 10th of Chaitra sud in Saṃvat 1702. He was born on the 9th Śrâvan sud at dawn. The subjoined figure represents his horoscope*:

* No explanation is given of this horoscope in the Persian MS., but persons unacquainted with astrology may be informed that the twelve areas of this diagram are assigned to Mercuray, the Sun, Venus, Saturn, the Moon, Mars, Râhu, Jupiter, Ketu, respectively, which was the combination of planets at the prince’s birth.
JÃM RANMALJI.

His adopted son Sâtâji was born of a daughter of the Râthohôd house of Jodhpur, and was expelled from the country after the demise of Rañmalji, his father. He then went to the Court of Delhi and obtained the parganah of Kaði, in Gujarât, in jâgir, and I will now relate an account of what his father did.

One day Jâm Rañmalji was hunting in the jungle and happened to perceive a Sanyâsi, reclining under a tree with a young and beautiful woman with arched eyebrows, whose charms captivated him; overcome by desire, he went and seated himself by her. When the Sanyâsi, overtaken by fate, had gone to bathe, the Jâm asked her who she was, and the lady spoke as follows:—“I am the wife of a Brâhman, and this godless Sanyâsi has inveigled me here by deceit; if you approve of me, I am at your service.”

“The Jâm ordered the Sanyâsi to be killed, and carried the woman away to his palace, but from his inordinate intercourse with her, he contracted a painful disease; and the pain becoming excessive he emasculated himself, but when he was healed, he married a Râthhoð lady, who became his Râñi. When she found her husband impotent, she bought a fine infant from her own tribe, pretending that she had given birth to him; she also sent for her brother from Jodhpur, and enjoyed full authority over her husband. Some time afterwards, however, Jâm Rañmalji, fearing her machinations, assembled his nobles and ministers of State, and addressed them thus: "I have been impotent for a long time, and this is not my son, and it is fitting that my younger brother Raisingh should succeed to the throne after me."

Jām Raṇmalji lost his life some time afterwards with Sāngoji Harādhol, fighting against the force of the imperial army, whereupon Raisingh expelled by force the adopted son the Rāṇī had bought, with all the Rāṭhoḍs, including also Govardhan Bhandāri and others, from Nagar. Raṇmalji's reign lasted 15 years, 3 months, and 18 days.

Jām Raisingh bin Lakhāji.

By the agreement of the nobles and chief men, he was installed on the throne on the 13th Asād vad, Saṁvat 1717. At that time Sultān Qutbū'd-dīn arrived from Ahmadābād with a powerful army. The Jām hastened to meet him, and fighting a sanguinary battle on the plain of Shekpāt, he lost his life. Hereon the imperial army occupied the city, and named it Islām-nagar. A mosque was built in the bazār, and from that time the Bādshāhi verno began to be levied. Kānwar Satāji (Prince Tamāchhi) and several other survivors of the battle left Nagar, which had no strong fort, and by sheltering themselves in the cactus jungle escaped to O k hā. Jām Raisingh reigned 2 years and 25 days.

Jām Tamāchhi Tagadh bin Raisingh.

On the 8th of Śrāvan vad, Saṁvat 1719, Tamāchhi succeeded to the throne and distressed the Bâdshâhi Thânadârs and the râyats by the depredations he committed around Nagar, in such a manner that he obtained the cognomen T a g a d h (Reiver). Gradually, however, after the expiration of fully nine years, he was pardoned his offences through the kind offices of Mahârâja Jasvantsingh of Jodhpur, and Vizir Asad Ali Khân, Sûbahdâr of Gujarât, on whom, when he was yet a minor official, the Jâm had on some occasion or other bestowed his own horse; and in Saûvat 1728 Nagar was restored to him, and he regained his throne, and the Qâzis and Muftis who had remained in the mosques were sent to hell. His reign lasted 27 years, 1 month, and 17 days. In those days Shâh Jahân Bâdshâh ruled at Dehli.

Jâm Lâkhài bin Tamâchi.

He obtained the masnad on the 10th Áso sud, Saûvat 1746, and sat on it 19 years and 1 month.

Jâm Râisingh bin Lâkhâ.

His reign began on the 10th Kârtik, in Saûvat 1765, but he was put to death by his brother Hardhol, the son of Hemâbâi Vâghelia Rajpûtanî, who held the pargânah Hariânâ in girûs.
He took possession of the throne, but fled for fear of the Mahârâja Jasvantsingh. The reign of both amounted to one year and two months.

Jâm Tamâchi bin Râisingh.

He succeeded to the throne on the 11th of Bhâdrava sud, Saûvat 1767. When he was yet very young, one of the slave girls of Jâm T a m â-chi, who was his nurse, entertained fears that Hardhol might endanger his life, and putting him into a box, conveyed him to his maternal aunt, Bāi Ratnāji, at the Court of Bhūj, and begged her to protect him. His aunt spent large sums of money to promote his interests, and also wrote to her brother Rāj Pratāpsingh to give his daughter in marriage to Mūbāriz-ūl-Mūlk, known also as Sārbūlānd-khān, the Sūbahdār of Gujarāt, and the daughter of one of his cousins to Sālābat Muḥammad Khān Bābi, who was at the head of the army, and they, being thus gained over, expelled Hardhol from Nagar and installed Tāmāchī on the masnad.

In consequence of his good services, the parganah of Hāriānā was given to the Rāj of Halawad. The villages of Charakhāi, Trākūrā, and Daiyā were given as dowry with the sister of Jhālā Nāranji, who was married to Salābat Khān. In course of time, however, the sons of the latter, i.e., Sherzāmān Khān and Dīlār Khān, sold all three villages to Kumbhājī of Gondal; and lastly, for the aid afforded by Rāo Sāheb Desalji of Bhūj; the fort of Bālambhā and several other mahals were mortgaged to him in Šaṁvat 1775, and in 1792 the Rāo Sāheb rebuilt the fort. Mūbāriz-ūl-Mūlk levied three lāhks of rupees the first year, and on coming the second year, after some dispute, through the intervention of Salābat Khān, he obtained one lākh as tribute.

Afterwards Mahārāja Ajīṭ śīṅgh, who became the Subah of Ahmadābād, arrived with an army at Nagar, planted a battery of artillery on a mound near the lake, and a sanguinary battle ensued, in which a great number on both sides drank the water of death. The Mahârâja returned unsuccessful, but the brother of the Jâm—Kâkâji by name—slew Jâm Tamâchi with the sword and sent him to Paradise. The reign of Tamâchi lasted thirty-two years and one month.

Jâm Lâkhâji bin Tamâchi.

He came to the throne on the 11th Âso sud, Saâmvat 1799, and died of small-pox, but some say by poison. He reigned 24 years, 9 months, and 10 days.

During his reign Nânji and Mehrâman Khavâs arrived from Halawaḍ, with Bâï Depâbâi whom Jâm Lâkhâji had married; and since Mehrâman was an able man, by the assistance of Mehtâ Bhânji and Jagjivan Ojhâ, he assumed the administration of the State. This monopoly displeased the other courtiers, who accordingly slew Nânji, the brother of Mehrâman Khavâs, in the Râjmahâl. Mehrâman Khavâs being a valiant man, taking no account of the choki-dârs and guards, hastened to the spot; but finding the doors locked and obtaining no entrance, he effected one by causing some men to stand on each other's shoulders, and using them as a ladder to scale the wall. Having in this manner entered the palace with a band of companions, he fought with the guards from morning till evening, slew several persons, and captured the person of Depâbâî. Afterwards the chokidârs and the townspeople, who were alarmed at the tumult which was going on, submitted to the sway of Mehrâman Khavâs, and from that day his authority became paramount.

Jâm Jasâji bîn Lâkhâji.

He was a minor when placed on the throne on the 11th of Kartik sud; in Sâmvat 1824. The Khavâses, Mehrâman and Bhavân, kept him under surveillance, surrounded him with men of their own tribe, and their own creatures and relations as attendants and servants both in the zanânâ and the palace. Whilst Mehrâman ruled alone Shâh Âlam reigned at Delhi.

Râo Sâheb Godji of Kachh crossed the Rañ with a large army and much artillery in order to realize what had formerly been promised him.
Mehrâman Khavâs therefore erected batteries against the fort of Bâlamblâ, which was in the possession of the Râo; and ere Râo Godji had crossed the Rañ, his thânahdârs were expelled with much ignominy, in Sâmvat 1824.

The origin of this enmity was as follows:—

Great fear had been entertained lest Hardholji should kill Jâm Tamâchî. Accordingly a female slave of Jâm Tamâchî, who was then an infant, put him into a box and conveyed him over to his maternal aunt, Bâi Râtnâbâî, at Bhûj, and asked her for aid. This lady spent a great deal of money to promote his interests, and through her efforts her brother Pratâpsingh, who was Râjâ of Halawad, wrote to Múbâriz-úl-Mulk and gained him over, and through his aid brought Jâm Tamâchi from Bhûj and seated him on the throne, as has been recorded above in its proper place. In consequence of these expenses and services, Bâlambhâ was mortgaged to the Râo Sâheb G o d ji, who rebuilt the fort and received the revenues of the mortgaged mahâls. But now the fort fell into the hands of the Jâm, and the Râo was obliged to depart without being able to effect anything, and the munition of the fort and six field guns and the treasure remained in the hands of the Jâm.

Kâkâji, brother of the Jâm, was a man of violent temper, who had killed the râja of M o r b i and two or three amirs and a hundred common men and women with his own hand, and his hand and sword were alike always bloody. He, seeing an opportunity, slew Jâm Tamâchi, and, rebelling, seized on the fort of Moîpur, and thence ravaged the country. Mehrâman therefore closely besieged that place, and it fell out that as he was seated at the window of that fortress, a musket ball struck him on the neck so that he died.

Bâl Sâhib Depâbâl, who had formerly conducted all the affairs of the country, was much harassed by the arrogance of Mehrâman Khavâs, and departed on the pretence of a pilgrimage to S r i N á t h j i, but since she had been predestined to perish on a dunghill, she returned in obedience to her fate again to Nagar, and the wicked Mehrâman Khavâs sent an escort of Sipâhîs and musicians to meet and to receive her, but when she arrived at the city, on the pretence that the day was unlucky he caused her to alight for the night at the house of Chatturbhuj, instead of entering the city, and dismissed her attendants. When the chariot stopped in the street, the Bâi Sâheb wished to alight, and placed one foot on the ground, and whilst the other was yet on the chariot, a sipâhî named Chând Ghorî, of hellish disposition, who was a disloyal wretch, struck her a terrible dagger thrust from behind the screen which the slave girls were holding out in order that she might alight, which passed right through her body. Thus this noble lady, wont to repose on soft velvet cushions, and to consider even rose-leaves almost as thorns, miserably perished in an unfrequented lane, where her body lay for two hours after her attendants had fled. At last, at the intercession of Jagjivan Ojhá and Mehtâ Bhânji, they burned her on a pile of aloes and sandalwood.

In Samvat 1832 Mehrâman Khvâs, being desirous of checking the dacoities of the people of Positra, resolved on conquering that strong fort and the country of Okha, and invited the Divân Sâheb Amârjî to aid him. During the siege of the fort, they dug a mine under one of the bastions and blew it up. The Divân Sâheb, who had, with many others, taken up a position under the rampart, observed, when the smoke and dust caused by the explosion allowed of a free view, that a large breach had been opened, and that the garrison was manfully making a sally from a small door. Hereon muskets became useless and a hand-to-hand fight with the sword ensued, in which the garrison were defeated.

On this occasion Kālū Mer, who had ere this treacherously come to Junāgaḍh and killed two Nāgar children and become liable to punishment, but had been suffered to depart under the protection of the Jamādār Amrān Arab and A’alam Khān Baluch, was now slain. The troops followed up the fugitives, and entering the fort at their heels, obtained possession of all the goods these freebooters had robbed from the ships of Arabia, Sindh, and the Dakhan, and of which there was great abundance. This news was communicated by the Divān Sāheb to Mehrāman Khavās, who was greatly rejoiced thereat, and feigned to be highly thankful and obliged to the Divān, but being of a treacherous disposition and fearing that the bravery of the Divān might become dangerous to himself, he intended to poison him, and invited him for that purpose to a repast:

"Remedies are good before events."

When the army had returned and encamped at Khamāb-hāliā, the repast was to have taken place, but the Divān Sāheb refused the invitation on the pretence that he had just received the news of the death of Khushāl Rāi Nāgar, the Duftarī of the Nawāb Sāheb at Junāgaḍh.

In Saṅvat 1839 Mehrāman Khavās made a league with Rāṇa Sulṭānji and Kumbhaji in order to ruin the Divān Sāheb Amarji, but was defeated in a battle fought at Pānchpīpla. After that he called the army of the Gaikwād to his aid, and conquered the fort of Devrā, but was unable to keep it, and after repairing its defences, which had been broken down, he returned. In Saṁvat 1844 he built the fort of Nāvānagār of white stone, with five gates and eight posterns and twenty-three towers.

In Saṁvat 1850 Jādejā Dāji of Gondal, Modaji of Dhrōl, Mehrāmanji of Rājkoṭ, and Ranmalji of Khirasrā, lighted the flame of rebellion by laying waste the province of Hālār; and to punish these men, Mehrāman Khavās marched an army into the parganas of Rājkoṭ and Sardhār. It so happened that the Divān Sāheb Raghunāthji, elder brother of the author, was at that time with me and my brother in Nagar with a large force.

The reason of the Divān’s arrival at Nagar was as follows:—When the Divān Sāheb Raghunāthji had been imprisoned by the Navāb Sāheb Hāmid Khān, the fort of Chorwād belonged to the author, whilst the fort of Sutrāpārā was in possession of his younger brother Dalpatrām, and we were liberated by the strength of our own hands. As Mehrāman Khavās had a feud with the surrounding rājās, he was in search of an experienced man, and thought our arrival would be a great assistance to him, and he therefore sent Mehta Adābhāi, kamāviśdār of the parganah of Kandornā, with a hundred sowars, a drum, and a flag to Chorwaḍ to recall the Divān. The Divān Sâheb, considering this a good omen, disregarded the pressing invitations to stay of Sheikh Badru’d-dīn, the Zamindār of Maṅgrol, as well as of the Nāvāb Sâheb Hâmid Khān, and the Zamindār of Gondal, and proceeded to Nagar, where he was received with much civility and politeness by Mehrāman Khawās, who obtained for him, from the Jâm’s government, the parganah of Pardhari and some villages in Kāthiāvāḍ in jāgir, together with the privilege of commanding the van of the army and certain other Sībandi commands. He received a seat opposite to, and on a level with, the Jâm Sâheb’s seat in darbār. Besides the Divān Pâghah he had several Arab banners under him, namely, those of Jamādār Sheikh Zubaidi, Sâlih Ab’d’ulla, Muhammad Abūbakr, Hâmid Mohsin, and Hâmid Nâsir, as well as other companies of Sindhis, such as those of the Jamādār O’mar Durâ, of Râna Rukan, amounting in all to nearly eight hundred men. Mehrāman Khawās regarded the Divān Sâheb as one of his own Âmirs. At this period Fârid Khân, Ali Khân, Khânbhai Seth, Bhagwânji Šodha, Gajaśingh Jhâlâ, and Keshavji and Vasanji, the maternal uncle of the author Mehta Adâbhâ Nâgar, Keshar Thakar Lohâna, all of whom were jāgirdârs, joined the army with the Zamindârs of Hâlâr.

Gajaśingh Jhâlâ from Halwad, Vakhtâji Desâi of Patâlī, and Bhupatsingh from Bhankodā arrived with auxiliary troops, and in one week the whole parganah of Sardhâr [Hâlûr] was laid waste, and from several villages large sums of money were raised. At that time Vakhat-singhji Râval of Bhâvnagar, who with a large army had been warring against the Kâthis and had succeeded in wresting Chital from the auxiliaries of the Navâb Sâheb Hâmid Khân, came and encamped at Jasdan, and intended to conquer also the fort of Jetpûr. On this occasion, however, a meeting between him and Mehrâman Khawâs was arranged by the Divân Sâheb Baghûnâthji, and both armies approaching each other like two seas, remained stationary for twenty days. Vakhatsingh being related to Gondal, was, however, unwilling on that account to join Mehrâman in attacking that State; while Mehrâman on his part was unwilling that Vakhat-singh should continue his warfare against the plundering Kâthis. Hence they separated without coming to any mutual agreement.

On that very day Morârji bin Dâlabhji, the cousin of the Divân Sâheb, who had been deputy in place of his father at Jûnâgâd, and was also mûtasaddi for the parganahs of Mângrol, Koûnûr, Unâ, and Delwâdâ, having been liberated from his imprisonment by the Navâb, arrived with a troop of cavalry and a band of Arabs, Jamâdâr A’wad Ali and Nûru’d-din, and Jiya and O’mar, and other Sindhis. Râval Vakhatsingh bestowed on him a fitting jâgir, and took him into his service. Owing to the evil of the times, Mehta Vasanjji Mânkaḍ, maternal uncle of the Divân Sâheb, died this year at the camp of Magarvâdâ.

Jâdejâ Dâji, of Gondal, and Raqmâlji, of Khirasrâ, and other Jâdejâs invited Fateh Muhammad, the Kâmdâr of Râo Râydhan, to aid them in the plunder of Hâlâr, which was well cultivated and full of wealth. Now, as the Râo of Bhûj had an old grudge against Nagar, Fateh Muhammad, who was assisted by good fortune and possessed a good share of bravery, was waiting for an emergency of this kind, considering that it would be to the advantage of his fame; and accordingly he persuaded the Râo Sâheb that this would be a good opportunity to avenge the ancient injuries inflicted by Jâm Râval, and crossed the Rân with a mighty army and a large quantity of artillery, and entered the province of Hâlâr. When Bhawân Khawâs, the younger brother of Mehrâman Khawâs, heard of this event, he hastened with an army to meet the foe, and encamped at the village of Khâkhârâbelâ. Fateh Muhammad Notiyâr, passing him by a flank movement, encamped his army in the plain of Pardhari. In the morning, after the sun, the Sâltân of the firmament, had dispersed the army of the stars, Bhawân proposed to retreat, but Purshotam Vâniâ came to the aid of his inexperience, and encouraged him by saying that no apprehensions were to be entertained of Kachhi troops, since in the games of the children of this country a boy is often heard to say: "Let me be alone on one side, and on the other all the Kachhis." Bhawân, the empty-headed, being thus puffed up by the bravado of Purshotam, like a leather bag full of wind, turned the army towards the enemy, and induced the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji and his two brothers to take the command of the vanguard.

When we three brothers joined the camp with our cavalry, Fateh Muhammad, although at the head of an army numerous as locusts and ants, on hearing our drums and seeing our banners, coiled himself up within his limits like a sleeping snake, and untwining himself like a half-burnt rope, as it were an elephant which has burst his chains, or a lion which has broken his bonds, and advanced his cannon and rockets and camel-swivels and muskets, and behind them followed 15,000 Kachhi infantry with Sindhis, Arabs, and Afghâns, 20,000 Râjpût and Sindhi cavalry, and 400 mail-clad men like elephants. As these successively advanced to attack us, the Gondal, Râjkot, and Raîmâlji's forces stood ready to engage on the right flank.

The cowardly Bhawân Khâwâs, having never made war, was in a fright, and was like one who pulls off his shoes before he has reached the water; he lost his presence of mind, and courage fled from his heart, and sought for some pretext to escape from this difficulty. He then said: "Let Râjâ Gajsingh of Halwad, who is related to both sides, begin negotiations of peace; to-day there is a truce, and Jhilrià, which is at a distance of four kos to the west of this, will be our next camp." The troops on receiving this news were glad to get out of their dangerous position, and on the pretence that their leader had so ordered, they borrowed speed from the wind and lightning, and quickly departed from that place. The army had not retreated farther than half a kos, when the author overtook Bhawàn Khawàs by order of the Divân Sàheb Raghûnâthji, on whose part he delivered to Bhawàn the following message: "The enemy has now arrogantly advanced. If we now retire and show our backs, it will be a disgrace to the government of Nawànagar, and will be imperilling our lives for nothing." Accordingly Bhawàn, with all the grandees of the State of Nagar, unwillingly determined that the army should retrace its steps, and said: "Tell the Divân Sàheb Raghûnâthji to form the right wing with his cavalry, whilst I take part in the battle on the left, with the whole army and artillery." The author hastened back quickly to my brother, the Divân Sàheb Raghûnâthji, and informed him of this, and he immediately marshalled his forces on the bank of the river in one line of infantry and one of cavalry, ready for battle, like a rampart of iron. The fight commenced with an attack by the enemy, who rushed upon us with seven thousand infantry, shouting "Ali! Ali!"
They attacked us boisterously like the waves of the stormy ocean, and the roaring of the artillery and the hissing of the rockets caused the earth to quake. The Divân Sâheb also attacked them like a lion with two hundred infantry and one hundred cavalry, shouting:— “Har Mâhâdev!” After firing one discharge of musketry at the enemy at close quarters, they closed and fought with swords, spears, knives, and daggers; then the antagonists came by degrees to fists and cuffs, striking each other on the cheeks and breasts with their hands. After many had been slain on both sides, all parties got fatigued, and the enemy retreated, whilst the Divân Sâheb departed victoriously amidst the sounds of joyful music to his post, leaving two hundred Kachhis killed or wounded on the battlefield. When Fateh Muhammad perceived his troops in this condition, he became greatly enraged, and advancing from his position poured his men on the troops of Bhawân Khawâs like a rain-cloud, breaking his array and dispersing his troops as a mountain torrent washes away pebbles. Bhawân Khawâs, with six sowârs, escaped thence by hard riding, and took refuge on the mound of Khâriwak. His carabineers became food for the sword, and the Gondal force plundered the Nawânagar camp, thus left destitute of guards and protectors, until nothing remained but the tents and cannon of the Divân Sâheb, which were in his own charge, whilst the army of Nagar had nothing except the canopy of heaven for a covering and the torch of the moon for a light.

After Fateh Muhammad had defeated Bhawân Khawâs, he erected batteries against the Divân Sâheb. Artillery began to roar on both sides, and musketry also did its work; Raj Gaj singh had withdrawn to one side, in the hope that as he was a relation of the Râo, Fateh Muhammad would not attack him, but was disappointed; and the enemy, who were desirous to engage, attacked and charged them. But the brave men of his force withstood their charge and remained as firm as Mount Elburz, and did not give ground, and the Kachh troops, courage failing them, returned unsuccessfully to their own camp. Bhawân Khawâs, with a few trusted Khawâs adherents and others, reached Jâliâ weeping with only the clothes on their backs, whilst the Divân Sâheb remained on the battlefield, shrouded and buried the dead, and having loaded the wounded on camels, arrived in Nagar on the evening of the second day. But Fateh Muhammad, of victorious fortune, went on burning and plundering the surrounding villages as far as Khambhâliâ, and then, after levying ransoms from them, marched back.

Jâm Jasâji makes a friend of the Râo Sâheb Bhânji.

The Jâm Sâheb was so much distressed by the overbearing demeanour of Mehrâman Khawâs and the ambition of his sons, that he consulted the rich and the poor on the means of overthrowing his power; but Mehrāman Khawās cut off the nose or the ears of every one who was discovered to have listened to the Jām Sāheb, and some were lightened of their heads; and in this way several foolish persons were ruined, imprisoned, and put to death, and the plot spread so far that Bāi Achhūbā, the Jām Sāheb’s wife, who was also much displeased with the state of affairs, held out to Shekh Muhammad Zubaidī, the commander of the Divāne Sāheb’s Risālāh, a bribe of one lākh of jāmis, but he excused himself by asserting that he was unwilling to do anything without the command of his master. Accordingly, at his suggestion, one night the Jām Sāheb dressed himself as a female and entered the Divān Sāheb’s house, and taking the author aside, said: “This Mehrāman is a thorn in my liver, or a pebble in my eye; if you will expel him by any means whatever, I will give you the pargauah of Jodhpūr in perpetuity, as well as one-half of all the moveable and immovable property of Mehrāman Khawās, which amounts in value to nearly one krôr.” When I communicated this proposal to my brother, he gave a plain answer as follows: “I will not, for greed of this world’s goods, bring disgrace upon the family of the Divān Sāheb Amarji, and cannot commit a treacherous act towards Mehrāman, through whose influence I have come to Nagar, but I shall, as far as possible, endeavour to restore peace between both sides." When the Jâm Sâheb despaired of being able to effect anything with the Divân Sâheb or the inhabitants of the town, he secretly despatched messages to the Jâdejâ confederates and to the Râo Sâheb Bhânji, inviting them to plunder the district of Hâlâr with the villages which were in the hands of Mehrâman Khawâs, and granting them permission to do so. Accordingly they immediately commenced to hover about those places like vultures over a carcass, according to the saying:—

"How fortunate is it to attain two objects by one act:
One should run with alacrity at the smallest signal of a friend."

ACCOUNT OF THE LAYING WASTE OF GONDAL
BY THE AID OF ÂBĀ SHELÛKAR.

Âbâ Shelûkar, who was the Sûbah of Âhmadâbâd, arrived with a powerful army on the frontiers of Hâlâr, levying tribute in Sainvat 1850, and he brought with him the cavalry of Malhâr Râo from Kaḍî, which was under the command of Hanumant Râo, and the army of Navâb Gháziu’d-din from Samí-Mûnjpûr, on condition of defraying the monthly pay of their troops.

Mehrâman Khawâs, by agreeing to pay what they demanded, obtained a promise from them that they would ravage the parganah of Gondâl.
As at that time one of the beloved children of the author was being married, and he was necessarily unable to be present, Pasu [Thakur] Lohânâ, the Mutassaddi of the town of Kâlâwâd, who on account of the attachment between his mother and Mehrâman, considered himself as a son of Mehrâman Khâwâs, was appointed to act as deputy by Mehrâman during my absence, but being a man of no weight or standing he did not conduct matters well.

Âbâ Shelûkar sent his Nâfīb Amratlâl Nâgar to Nagar to request the presence of the Divân Sâheb, as without him no business could be satisfactorily conducted; but the latter despatched the author, to receive whom Âbâ Shelûkar ordered troops to march out, which escorted him with many demonstrations of honour to the camp, where he received for a whole month an honourable reception, and spent his time very pleasantly, seeing at night dancing girls perform and hearing songs and music, while the days were passed in the amusements of chess and card playing. After the expiration of a month after ravaging the parganah of Gondal and making it a grazing ground for wild beasts he returned.

It is related that Nânâ Farnâvis, of Puñâ, was enamoured with the wife of Âbâ Shelûkar, but as he was unable to obtain access to her alone and thus enjoy this rose without a thorn, he appointed Âbâ Shelûkar to the Subâhdâri of Âhmadâbâd and farmed to him the revenues of that province for an annual sum of twelve and a half lâkhs of rupees for the space of five years, and thus removed the snake from the treasure.

Âbâ Shelûkar was himself a voluptuary, and had intercourse with many Moghal, Afghân, and Hindû females. They have said, “He who stops the road of others, some one will stop his road.” And it so happened to him that a cow entered his grain-yard. But, somehow or other, he became acquainted with the actions and conduct of his wife, whom hitherto he had imagined to be chaste, and, therefore, pretending that he wished to visit Dwârkâ, he brought his wife with him to Gûjarât.

I have myself beheld her on several occasions, and did not consider her to be very handsome; but as the verse says—

“You should see Laila with the eyes of Majnûn.”

In this way Nânâ Farnâvis lost both the lady and the money.

Verse:

“Sikandar even was unable to drink a draught of the water of life,
For such things cannot be effected either by power or gold.”

Meeting of the Navâb Sâheb Hâmîd Khân with Mehrâman Khawâs at Kâlâwaḍ.

When the Navâb Sâheb Hâmîd Khân returned from the army, he had an interview with Mehrâman Khawâs at the Qasbah of Kâlawaḍ, on which occasion the Navâb Sâheb took hold of the hand of the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji and that of the author, and placing them in those of Mehrâman, said:—“These are deposits of mine, treat them honourably and kindly, and consider them for a short time as your guests.”

Concerning the Wâghers of Okhâ.

In Saṁvat 1851 Mehrâman marched an army to Okhâ, in order to punish the Wâghers, and razed some of their villages to the ground.

The author having obtained leave, went on pilgrimage to Becharâji. On his way he encamped at Dhândhalpûr, where he became the guest of Godaḍ Khavaḍ. At this time a band of sowârs in the service of the Zamindârs of Limbûḍi, Wadhwân, Dhrângadhrâ, and Chûdâ, carried off some of his cattle, but were pursued by the author, who recovered the cattle, after some fighting, at the village of Sejakpûr, but lost three men and horses. Again in the plain near Bajûnâ he met a band of accursed ones of Jatwârâ, under their chief, a Vârâhi Jat, Nura by name, but after a little musketry fire we dispersed them, and afterwards all visited mother Becharâji. Bhâosingh Desâî, Zamindâr of the town of Pâtđi, and his son

This interview has already been alluded to before. Here, however, the translator from the Gûjarâthi writes that the Navâb said to Mehrâman that: ‘He had better treat them with the honour due to their rank.’
Vakhatsingh and his brother Râsâji came to meet us with great civility.

FLIGHT OF THE Jâm Sâheb Jasâji.

In Saṁvat 1853, Śivrâm Kamedân arrived with an army on behalf of the Šrimant Peshwâ and Gâekwâd Sarkârs, to collect tribute in Kâthiâwâd, and encamped at Pardhari. Mehrâman Khawâs despatched me with some followers to make arrangements about paying the jamâbandi, and Śivrâm himself came out about three miles riding on an elephant to meet us, and I stayed with him for a month and a half, and he treated me honourably. He seemed to me to be a man of great courage and ability.

Suddenly news arrived (in the camp) that the Jâm Sâheb with his brother Satâji had escaped by quick riding under cover of the night, and had encamped near the Kâlâwaḍ Gate. This happened as follows:—It had always been the intention of the Jâm Sâheb to overturn the power of Mehrâman Khawâs, therefore by promises of pay and service he allured the Arab Jamâdârs to his own side, and plotted with them; and they, to remove all suspicion, encamped at the village of Morkandâ and agreed to remain there waiting in ambush, till they heard the firing of a gun, on hearing which signal they were all to assemble at the Kâlâwaḍ Gate. Jamâdâr Sâlih, of evil fortune, who was on guard at the Kâlâwaḍ Gate, was admitted by them as an accomplice in this difficult undertaking. Accordingly at midnight on a dark night, considering the rain and clouds as an aid to his design, the Jâm arrived at the gate and commenced a musketry fire in the direction of Mehru’s mansion. Mehru, awaking from the sleep of carelessness, saw the aspect of affairs changed. He immediately sent for the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji, and commenced to surround and cannonade the gate and its defenders.

The Arabs, who were listening for the sound of firing as a fasting man for the sound of Allah Akbar, at once ran to arms; but owing to the good fortune of Mehru and the bad luck of the Jâm, such violent rain fell that night that the two rivers were in full flood. The hopes of the Arabs were thus blasted, that is to say, they could not cross over, and owing to the non-arrival of their aid, the Jâm and his adherents began to lose courage from the constant cannonade. Sâlih and most of his men being wounded, waved a flag of surrender. Mehrâman, at the advice of his chief ministers, showed them quarter on condition that the Jâm Sâheb should come to his (Mehru’s) house, and live there at his ease like a parrot in a cage. And after obtaining in this matter the guarantee of the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji, of Mâhâdev Ojhâ whose family is distinguished by a reputation for high birth and learning in the zillâ of Hâlâr, of Muhammad Bârug and Nâsir Bârug, the Arabs, and of Mâlik Farid Khân Šetha, the Jâm Sâheb came down, and when his palanquin arrived at the house of Mehrâman, which is on the main road, he was forcibly taken in and kept under strict surveillance, whilst Satâji, his brother, managed by swift running to escape to his own house. The securities could not, for fear of Mehrâman, forbid him thus carrying off the Jâm Sâheb, and the latter kept him in durance vile for two months without allowing him a change of clean clothes, or a barber to shave him, or the services of a washerman. The Divân Sâheb, who could no longer bear this state of matters, despatched the author to Mehrâman in order to effect the release of the Jâm Sâheb. Mehrâman, however, spoke so harshly and abusively that we both laid our hands on our daggers, but at last he suffered the Jâm Sâheb to depart to his palace. From that day, however, Mehrâman harboured great spite against the Divân Sâheb, and endeavoured to get him removed. In the same year also his brother Bhawân Khawâs died an unnatural death from a razor wound. He was Mehru's younger brother.

Arrival of Fateh Muhammad.

In Saṁvat 1853 Fateh Muhammad Notiyâr again crossed the Raṭ with the desire of ravaging Hâlâr. Mehrâman Khawâs elevated his standards against him, and entertained in his service the Afghân cavalry of Jamâdâr Sher Jang Khân and Alîf Khân Sâhibdâd Khân, and Karîmdâd Khân and Anwar Khân, who had been discharged by Malhâr Râo, the Zamindâr of Kâdî, and promised the Navâb Sâheb Hâmid Khân two lâkhs and fifteen thousand jâmis for his aid, and thus collected a very large force, and encamped at the village of Dhensarâ, of the Morbi Parganah, near the shore of the Rân.

Fateh Muhammed, from his inborn valour, encamped his force at the distance of a cannon shot. Mehrâman Khawâs drew up his men in battle array in two lines with the forces of the Navâb Sâheb of Mukhtiâr Khân Bâbi, the Jâgirdâr of Bântwâ, and Shekh Mûrtazâ with his troops from Mângrâl, and Jamâl Khân Balûch, Harisingh Pûrbiâ, and the Sindhis, and Pratâpsingh and Kesrisingh, grâsiâs of Bâlâgâm. Fateh Muhammed, giving up all idea of fighting, offered to treat for peace through Gajsingh, and made peace on condition that both sides should agree to whatever should be settled during the next months by the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji on behalf of Nagar and Kaliân Hirji on behalf of Jûnâgâdh, and Karsanji Jhâlâ on behalf of Râj Gajsingh, the Shâ Shâvji on behalf of the Râo Sâheb, and thus by a treacherous peace he evaded all evil.

Râo Sâheb Râidhanji comes to Nagar and returns disappointed.

In Saâvat 1854, Râo Sâheb Râidhanji arrived with (his Kâmdâr) Fateh Muhammed and an army more numerous than ants and locusts, accompanied by fire-raining artillery, and encamped in the plain of Navánagar, near the temple of Śri Nâganâtha Mâhâdeva.

Mehrâman Khawâs, being on bad terms, not only with his master the Jâm, but also with the ryots and qasbâtis, had no other friends except the Divân Sâheb, and did not consider Alif Khân, Zûlîkar Khân, and other Arab Jamâdârs friendly to him. Accordingly he built up the fort gates with bricks and placed two or three heavy guns in position, and stood ready to oppose them, but some who were within the town, such as Mâlik Farid Khân, Ali Khân, Daulat Khân, and other qasbâtis, colluded with Fateh Muhammad, and informed him that as the wall of the fort on the side of the talâv was not strong, that he ought to make his attack on that side, and that as soon as he had placed his scaling ladders against it they would make an attack from the inside, and thus fighting on both sides, they hoped to repulse the Afghâns, who were not furnished with firearms, and Fateh Muhammad accordingly did so. It happened, however, that Mehrâman Khawâs came at sunrise to inspect the batteries just as an angel alights from heaven. Accordingly, when the sovereign of the firmament ascended with his rays into the azure vault, and the Kachhi troops had placed ladders against the fort wall, some of them were slain and others thrown down. An assault was also made on the Khambhâliâ Gate, and many attacked the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji, whose position was at the Nâganâtha Gate. The thunder of the artillery and the confusion shook the earth, and in the tumult among the townspeople, during which the author happened to be on the mound near the talâv, his horse was killed under him by a musket-ball, and hastened to the posture of non-existence. In fine, by the protection of Nâganâtha, who is the tutelary deity of this country, Mehrâman Khawâs gained the victory, and Fateh Muhammad, several of whose men were slain or wounded, retired and laid siege to Khambhâliâ, where he met with the same honours he had earned in Nagar.

In Saîvat 1855, Âmin Sâheb [son of Jemâdâr Hâmid] arrived from Barodâ to collect tribute in Kâthiâwâd. When he was encamped at Wânkâner the author was despatched by Mehrâman Khawâs for the purpose of settling with him the sum to be paid by Nagar, and was courteously met by Jamâdâr Nâhâl Khân and Jamâdâr Bachâ, by Mâdhâr Râî Nâgar, and by Raghunâth Modi, and it was settled that tribute should be levied at the rates of Šivrâm Kamidân, from whose time treble tribute was imposed on Kâthiâwâd. This amount Mehrâman afterwards extorted by force from the Nâgars of Nagar.

ATTACK OF THE TOWN OF BHÂNWAĐ.

Mehrâman Khawâs sent the author in Saîvat 1855 with a powerful army and two guns to subdue the fort of Bhânwađ, because the Râjpûts of the districts of Hâlâr and Bardâ and Dalâsâ, the auxiliaries of the disappointed and conquered Fateh Muhammad, caused great confusion by their depredations. The siege was carried on during four months, and no pains were spared by Mûsâ Jân Farangi, who was afterwards executed by Abâ Shelûkar at Âhmadâbâd, and by the Afghân, Arab, and Sindhi troops, but the fort could not be conquered on account of the evil destiny of Mehrâman, the cowardice of Keshavji Kâmîdhîr, and the bullet wound the author had received in his right arm.

Meanwhile Fateh Muhammad had, with the intention of raising this siege, arrived from Kachh and encamped in the vicinity of Nagar, and Mehrâman Khawâs, considering this a good opportunity, sent the Divânji Sâheb Raghûnâthji with Keshavji and an army by sea to aid Shâ Shâvji, who was fighting with the Râo Sâheb at Mânâdvi, but Shâvji, mistrusting the people of Nagar, declined their assistance and made peace.

At that time Śivrâm Kâmêdân was collecting peshkash in the zillah of Panchâl, and Mehrâman sent the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji to make arrangements for the proper payment of the sum to be paid for his aid, and he accordingly departed to bring him to their assistance. The Divânji Sâheb arranged this matter with Śivrâm at the camp of Bhâdlâ and returned with him to Nagar. Meanwhile, ill-disposed persons instilled doubts into the heart of Mehrâman by telling him that the intentions of the Divân Sâheb were unknown, and that he might, by taking the side of the Jâm Sâheb, bring trouble on all parties. This fear impelled Mehrâman Khawâs to arrange an interview at Dhûmâo with Fateh Muhammad, and there concluded peace with him. When the army of Śivrâm approached, Mehrâman receded from his agreement and informed him by letter that as the business regarding which he had invited his aid was fortunately terminated, he need not take the trouble of coming; accordingly he returned.

Since the Divân Sâheb had concluded the negociation himself, he was unable to make any excuse to Śivrâm. He therefore took upon himself to convocate the pâtels of the neighbouring districts, and levying from them the money (to pay the army), gave it to Śivrâm Kamedân. Mehrâman Khawâs became still more displeased with the Divân Sâheb than before. Accordingly the latter went away from Nagar, and took up his abode at Dhrol, whence he carried on a secret correspondence with the Jâm Sâheb.

In Saṅvat 1856 Mehrâman Khawâs took leave of this world after a short illness, but as his children were by a Musalmân woman, they could not inherit his property, which was given to the sons of Bhâwan Khawâs, i. e., Sangrâm and Prâgji. They could not, however, remain in Nagar without molestation; accordingly they betook themselves to their jâgir, which consisted of the three forts of Joqjiâ, Bâlambhâ, and Åmran, with thirty-six villages. They took with them all the cash, but were unable to take with them thousands of kalsis of jowâri which they had buried underground; accordingly they lost this.

After these men had departed to these places, the Divân Sâheb was often politely invited to join them, but he always declined to do so. He gave this information also to the author who returned to Nagar after having accomplished half the journey to Jûnâgaôh, and after reaching the fort of Devrâ, as has been already related in the account of Porbandar recorded in the description of it. The author's younger brother Dalpatrâm was sent to Harisingh the Râjâ [Thakor] of Limbdî, between whose father Harbhâmji and the Divân Amarji great friendship existed. Here he remained eight months, until the Jâm Sâheb invited the Divân Sâheb in a most complimentary and kind way to his court, and gave him the parganah of Rânpuôr in jâgir and enrolled him among the nobles of his State.

The Jâm Sâheb collects Aspērâ (Horse-Tax) from Kâthiâvâp and other Districts.

When the Jâm Sâheb had satisfied his mind by the expulsion of Mehrâman's family, he marched with a large army to collect aspērâ (horse-tax) both from the mahâls where it was usually levied and also from other mahâls where this levy had not previously been made. In Saôvat 1857 he demolished the fort of Jasdan. Now the Navâb Sâheb Hâmîd Khân had despatched Jamiât Khán Shirwâni and the Jamâdâr Umar to Nagâr a month previously, to invite the Divân Sâheb Raghùnâthji to Jûnâgaðh, and requested him to come speedily. Accordingly he went to that place [but through the evil advice of Karsandâs Wâniâ and Âzambeg Chelâ he was dismissed] and returned again, but the Navâb paid his expenses, and restored him his four hereditary villages. On his return, when the Divân Sâheb reached the town of Dhorâji, the Jâm Sâheb sent for him to join his army. He therefore advanced quickly and joined the Jâm at the camp of Kûndni, and he levied from each village of Jhâlâwâd as large a contribution as they could afford to pay, and he also sent a force to the Goghâbârah Parganah, which had never before been subject to his exactions and extorted what he could. On his return he displayed his victorious standards as far almost as the Gîrnâr Mountain. He collected a small tribute also from the villages of the Kâthis subject to Jûnâgaðh, and he left a thânâ in Jasdan, but it was unable to stay there. He now returned joyful and successful.

The Capture of the Fort of Kandornâ.

Now, since the Jâm Sâheb was much elated by the greatness of his army and the abundance of his treasure, he persuaded Mûrâd Khán and Fakir Muhammad Makrânî, who were displeased with the Râñâ, to hand over to him the fort of Kandornâ, a dependency of Porbandar, in consideration of a payment to them of a lákh of jâmis and being granted their former service, but in Šaṁvat 1864 Colonel Sâheb Alexander Walker conquered it from him [in two hours], and handed it over to the Rânâ Sûltânji’s minister. The eye of the age never saw and the ear of the time never heard a man more true to his word or of such lofty courage and such beneficent views.

THE ENGLISH AND GÂEKWÂD GOVERNMENTS SEND ARMIES TO NAGAR.

In Šaṁvat 1868 (A. D. 1812) an Arab without cause slew one of the English Sâhebs and took refuge in the fort of Moḍpûr, and the Jâm Sâheb, although strongly pressed and commanded, would not, as is customary with Râjâs—jealous of their honour—surrender the man who had fled to him for protection. The English Government had therefore a strong reason for acting against him.

Accordingly English troops arrived like waves of the stormy ocean, with Captain Carnac Sâheb and Gangâdhar Shâstri and Fateh Singh Gâekwâd Senâ-Khâs-khel Shamsher Bahâdûr and Mir Sâhib Kamâlu’d-din Hûsain, Mir Sarfaraz Âli Amin Sâheb and the Divân Vithalrao, and laid siege to Nagar.

The first day when the artillery began to play, several horses and sipâhis were killed, and on the second day the English guns entirely silenced those of the fort: their roar spread mortal fear among the townspeople; the Rājpūt troops lost courage, but nevertheless the Divān Sāheb Raghūnāthji and Jamādār Fakir Muhammad fought one day with one of the English regiments. As neither party gave way, the conflict only ceased with night.

The lion-hearted Jām Sāheb perceived that his Rājpūts could not hold their ground, and accordingly made overtures for peace, and reproached his Rājpūts saying: “On the first day when the Divānji Sāheb Raghūnāthji desired to negotiate for peace you said that he had not a brave heart, and that as we are Rājpūts we shall listen to overtures of peace only after we have drunk the blood of our foes. All that was mere empty boasting.” The Rājpūts and Gosain Govardhanji and the Māhājans, after consultation, made proposals to the Jām, agreeing to conclude peace. Accordingly by the order of the Jām Sāheb peace was afterwards concluded with the English through the Divān Sāheb Raghūnāthji, on condition of the Jām’s paying to them a lākh of jāmis [koris] annually for a period of ten years towards the costs of the war, and it was also settled that he should pay thirteen lākhs of jāmi koris, which were claimed by the Kachh Darbār. The army then returned.

A KACHH ARMY CROSSES OVER TO HĀLĀR.

In Sāmvat 1869, Fateh Muhammad crossed the Raṇ and came over with a numerous army to Hālār. On hearing this news, the Jām Sâheb called the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji from Kûtiânâ to his aid, in order to oppose the enemy. Agreeably to my brother's order, I, the author, set out at the head of 300 horse and foot and one cannon, and by marching continuously reached Nagar and encamped near the fort. The Jâm Sâheb Jasâji condescended to come to the author's tent and kindly praising him, said aloud in the presence of the whole company:—

"O Ranchodji,

Of Rûstam I have heard, but you, I see,
Can, hearing, be ever like seeing?

In this age, in which we meet with nothing but treachery, there is no man faithful except the Divân Raghûnâthji among my dependants, or who would jeopardize his life in my service. As I found no one worthy to undertake this difficult negotiation, I have invited him to take it on himself. To-day the army of Fateh Muhammad, which possesses thirteen cannons and other warlike engines, and in strength exceeds 20,000 men, will encamp in, and begin to devastate one of my crown parganahs. You should therefore set out at once and attack them with your cavalry near Hariânâ, where they will not have the shelter of a fort." Accordingly, the author pronounced the victory-giving name of Šankar, and mounted his charger, and encamped the same evening at Hariânâ. Meanwhile Fateh Muhammad erected his standards at the distance of a kos. The Jâm Sâheb, however, had the foresight to send me, within the space of two days, a reinforcement of one thousand infantry and four hundred cavalry with two cannons.

Some men at the court, however, were envious, and conceived themselves dishonoured by our recall; and Gokal Khawâs, Gajsingh Jhâlâ, and others brought neither arrows, guns, bullets, provisions, nor eatables, and a discontented souldier, so that for two days the army was but half fed, and some men remained altogether hungry; nevertheless the author, trusting in God's help, and giving up all reliance on the aid of Gokal Khawâs and Gajsingh, went forth with a select company of one hundred Turkish (Rûmi) infantry and one hundred Masqâtis at dawn and attacked the camp of the enemy, who being, as it were, yet drowned in the sleep of carelessness, offered scarcely any resistance, and suffered our muskets to be fired into the tents; when lo! Sûndarji Khatri, Saudâgar, who on account of his selling horses to the English was connected with them, and who as a resident of Kachh had accompanied Fateh Muhammad, hung out a flag of truce! As soon as the firing had ceased, he alighted from his carriage and produced a letter from the Resident of Barodâ, Carnac Sâheb, which enjoined a cessation of hostilities. I considered it incumbent upon me to obey so exalted an order, and Sûndarji obtained from me a truce of three days as well as a promise of safety as to the life of Jamâdâr Fateh Muhammad, and he agreed to the restoration of everything plundered and compensation for everything burnt. As the safety of Fateh Muhammad was in jeopardy, he was determined to save his life by vulpine cunning, and thus obtained to aid him the influence of Sûndarji, who was the Dimnah of the period, and the order of the powerful English. Then he borrowed celerity from the lightning and fled in the moonlight, which is the foe of nocturnal thieves, without beat of drum. But the author followed (in spite of the prohibition of Sûndârji) at his heels at the distance of an arrow-shot, and captured all the carts and baggage which he left behind, until Fateh Muhammad recrossed the Rañ after suffering a hundred disgraces.

The next day Colonel Cruchley Sâheb arrived at the request of Pingalshi Bhât* and Vithal Râo who came with the army of the Gâekwâd, and pursued him nearly to Kotâriâ. Here Fateh Muhammad was, for his honour’s sake, obliged to fight, and after they had taken prisoners, some 30 horsemen with their horses, they returned.

The author, agreeably to the wish of the Divân Raghûnâthji, came and encamped in the parganah of Bâlambhâ, but as the Divân Sâheb Vithal Rao harboured a grudge against me, the Jâm Saheb now made over the command of his army to Kâmdhâr Jasráj and Gokal Khawâs, and sent for me to court under the pretence of wishing the pleasure of my company. The Divân Sâheb Vithal Rao now returned to his country, and two months afterwards, viz., in the month of Muharram, Jasráj and Gokal returned unsuccessfully to Nagar.

* The Persian MS. always uses the pun Bâd furush: wind-seller; wind-bag; boaster; to express the word Bhât and the translation from the Gujarâthi guided me to render it correctly; but here it has “Charan.”

As it is the law of this perishing world that we must all abandon it with sorrow, so the Jâm Sâheb Jasâji departed from it by a natural death on the 5th of Śrâvan in Sañvat 1870 (A.D. 1814), after a reign of forty-six years, nine months, and nine days. His younger brother, by name Satâji, who had before this been offended with him and fled to the Khawâses, and after that had taken refuge with the Gâekwâd Government at Amreli, was by the advice of the same, in concert with the English, installed after the lapse of one year, in the paraganah of Rânpur, which had been the Jâgir of the Divân Sâheb Raghûnâthji, and now he returned to the city and sat on the throne, Jâm Satâji bin Lâkhâji.

Jâm Satâji was always sick, and also had no children, and had a weak, feeble body. Achhubâ Râñi, the widow of Jâm Jasâji, with much foresight, adopted a son named Rañmâliji from Jâdjejâ Jasâji, the Zamindâr of Bhânwaâ, and gradually paid two lakhs of rupees on this account to the two Governments [the Gâekwâd and the English], and it was agreed that he should succeed to the gâdi after the death of Jâm Satâji, who was in a dying state.

Satâji made a will, testified to by the nobles of his State, that the Kâmdhâr Jagjivan Devji, who had inherited this position since several generations, should be confirmed in the post; but Motirâm Bûch, the Nâgar, who aspired to it, with the consent of Achhubâ Râñi, threw obstacles in his way by exciting the Arab Jamâdârs of Masqât, who were in the forts of Pardhari and Kandornâ, to rebellion, through Wâniâ Andarji, a vakil of Jâm Satâji. These men committed great depredations and much confusion ensued, but Jagjivan, on the strength of his previous connections with the Divân Sâheb Vithal Râo, Nâyib of the Gâekwâd Government, requested him to expel the Arabs from the abovementioned two forts, and promised to pay his expenses. Accordingly Vithal Râo began by introducing several Arab regiments into Nagar under the command of Bodar Khatri and others, whilst Sûndarji Khatri, the Nâyib of Ballantine Sâheb, on the other hand, as well as the new Sibandis who had always been desirous of obtaining employment, all contributed to drain the treasury of the Jâm Sâheb, and succeeded, on account of the misunderstanding between Jagjivan and Motirâm, in emptying it. In fine, the Divânji Sâheb Vithal Râo and Ballantine Sâheb and Sûndarji Khatri, on the agreement that their expenses should be paid, joined the Jâm with about one thousand men.

In Saâmvat 1872 they commenced, under the command of Hendly Sâheb, to besiege and batter the fort of Kandornâ. Both Jagjivan and Motirâm unmercifully squandered the money which did not belong to them, and after a protracted siege the Divân Sâheb Vithal Râo and Govind Râi mounted to chastise the accursed Masqâtis, who foolishly, miscalculating their strength, issued forth and commenced a musketry fire, and were ignorant that "the monkey who plays with the lion will defile the ground with his own blood." When a large number of the accursed ones were drawn up in order of battle, the victorious army of the English and Vithal Râo attacked them like a sudden misfortune, and dashed them beneath the iron hoofs of the horsemen, and by the thrusts of their buckler-piercing swords sent them to hell. They who escaped from the sword begged for quarter, and surrendered the forts to the servants of the Jâm Sâheb. After concluding this affair, the army marched to Pardhari and expelled the Masqâti Arabs from thence. They, however, took refuge in the fort of Jodiâ, with Sangrâm Khâwâs. The Jâm Sâheb who had long been seeking a cause of offence against Sangrâm Khâwâs, made the shelter of these rebels his excuse, and the English and Gâckwaç armies reached the place in the middle of the rainy season. Sûndarji, whose fortune was in the ascendant, and whose patron was Ballantine Sâheb, consulted with the Râpi Achhubâ, and collected an army to wrest the tâlûkâs from the Khawâses, and agreed to pay 8½ lâkhs of rupees for the aid of the English army, which sum was to be payable by eight instalments. When the army arrived near the fort of Jodîâ, Sangràm Khawâs and the garrison were alarmed at the shining muskets and waving banners, and lost heart. Sangràm, pale and trembling, came quickly to the Commander of the army, and asked for quarter, and surrendered the fort with all its artillery and ammunition, and all his property, but his family departed under British protection to Morbi. Afterwards, however, by bribing the English officers of Barodâ and making friends with Sûndarji Khatri and the Divân Sâheb Vîthal Râo, Sangràm obtained the parganâ of Âmbran in jâgir from the Jâm Sâheb, who was compelled to give it, whether he liked or not. Sûndarji Khatri, who was the agent and Nâyib of the English, obtained the farm of the parganâ of Jodîâ-Bâlambhâ for one lâkh and fifteen thousand jâmîs, whereas its revenue exceeds two and a half lâkhs, for a term of eight years. This favour he obtained through the intervention of Motirâm, who was jealous of Jagjivan Devji, who was a connection of the author’s, and who obtained for himself the towns of Râwal and Âsodar, the revenue whereof amounts to sixty thousand jâmîs. When the English army returned, Sûndarji and Ballantine Sâheb, on the pretence of inquiring into the bad government of the Navânagar State, returned and made a false accusation against Jagjivan Devji, between whom and Motirám there was much enmity, and hence Jagjivan was much annoyed and fell sick.

In Sañvat 1875 I wished to go on a pilgrimage to the Narmadâ, and after going to Jodià, to have an interview with Ballantine Sâheb, I spent several days at Nagar to make preparations for the journey. On this occasion the Bai Sâheb Achhubâ Râñî kindly gave me employment in her pâgah, and borrowed from me seventy-five thousand rupees on the security of the Kandornâ Parganah. But in Sañvat 1880 Barnwell Sâheb becoming himself responsible for the payment of this sum, handed over that parganah to Hansrâj Seth; but when Barnwell Sâheb left this country with a sad heart on account of the loss of his wife, whom he loved dearer than life, Wilson Sâheb, who remained but a short time in power, was inimical to me, because I aided the Navâb in all matters and opposed the management of the Khâtris and the Jhâlâs, who were protected by him. He therefore wrote what he pleased in the records, and then left. After him Blane Sâheb, who had cotton in his ears towards the voice of justice, rejected my claim for my money, which amounted to nearly eight lakhs of jâmis, and caused me great loss. And he, not regarding the pledge of the English Government, abased whomsoever Barnwell Sâheb had exalted. In Saṃvat 1876, on the ekādasi-day (eleventh of the light half) of the month of Phālgūn, the Jām Sāheb Satāji departed to the next world. The length of his reign was 5 years and 6 months and fifteen days, and he was succeeded by Jām Raṇmālji, son of Jādejā Jasāji, and the adopted son of the Jām Sāheb Jasāji.

JĀM RAṆMĀLJI.

In Saṃvat 1880 Barnwell Sāheb, who was a man able to appreciate respectable persons favourably disposed towards the Government of the Company Bahādūr, and who much resembled Alexander Walker in this matter, in order to keep under subjection the Jām Sāheb Raṇmālji, who was an impetuous young man, impatient of any kind of restraint, conferred the farm of the whole country of Nagar for a period of ten years for an annual sum of seventeen lâkhs and thirty thousand jāmis upon Hansrāj Seth, nephew of Sūndarjī Khatri, who had already a claim of twenty-six lâkhs of jāmis against this State; but afterwards, on account of the disagreement of both parties, and on account of the disapproval of Wilson Sāheb and Blane Sāheb, the contract was annulled by the Jām Sāheb without considering the seal of the English guarantee, but following the advice of counsellors like minded with himself, thus he dissolved the farm and dismissed Hansrāj.

After the departure of Wilson Sāheb, who was not worthy to govern, and knew not black from white, Blane Sāheb carried on matters con trary to the usages of previous rulers [? Political Agents]—

Whoever came a habitation built,
But went again and left it to another,
Who also entertained crude designs,
So that the habitation no one used!

In Sānvat 1883 (A.D. 1827) the people of this country again fell into misery; the Nāgars and Sipāhis are without watan, the living have no bread, and the dead no shroud.

In Sānvat 1885, on the 5th of the light half of the month of Māha, the wedding of the Jām Sāheb Raṃmālji with the daughter of Rāwal Wajesingh, the Rājā of Bhāvnagar, was celebrated with great pomp. Gold was given freely, colour was scattered, and largesses bestowed. At the invitation of the Jām Sāheb, the author sent to the wedding his children Lakhmiśankar, Śankarparsād, Maniśankar, and Revāsankar, with 50 sowārs, and they were highly delighted.

Oh Ranchodīji, whence did you come, and whither have you arrived? Where did you live and whither have you emerged?

If you write the history of each country at such length, it will be necessary to write another book. Enough! Enough! for life is short and this history very long.

In short, this State of Nagar contains three ports and fourteen inhabited mahāls, governed independently and prosperously. The etiquette in use is that formerly in vogue among Moghuls of the courts of Dehli and Âlmadâbâd. The mahâls are: Khambhâliâ, Lâlpûr, Rânpûr, Bhânwað, Modpûr, Jodhpûr, Kandornâ, Kâlâwað, Pardhari, Joðiâ, Bâlambhâ, Âmran, Hariânâ, and Kâthiâwâd; and the ports are Nagar, Joðiâ, and Salâyâ, and pearls are found in the sea at Sachânâ. The Kâthiâwâd mahâls are four, viz., Átkot, Barwâlâ, Bhâdlâ, and Sânthli, and there is an iron mine in the Khambhâliâ Parganah. The mahâls of the brethren of the Jâm are as follows: Dalâsâ, Dhrol, Khirasrâ, Râjkot, Sardhâr, and Gondal. The whole revenue of the Jâm’s country amounts to thirty-five lâkhs of jâmis, but in former times it was double this amount.

ACCOUNT OF OKHÂ.

Five thousand years ago Śri Kṛishṇa with all the Jâdavas, who consisted of fifty-six tribes, and whose number was incalculable, came to live here fleeing from the city of Mathurâ through fear of Kâl Yavan, Râjâ of Kandahâr, and founded the city of Dwârkâ in that island and dwelt there. After the lapse of several years, the Jâdavas came to Patan Deva to bathe at Prâchi and perform adoration to Somanâth, but in the drunkenness of wine, which is the mother of evil, the whole tribe fell to fighting amongst themselves, and most of them drank of the goblet of death, and Śri Kṛishṇa himself also, being pierced by the arrow of a hunter, departed to adorn the throne of Vaikûntth. The Wâdhel Râjpûts, though originally belonging to this tribe, had been captured in former times, both men and women, by Sūltān Mahmūd Ghaznavi, and then again adopting the religion of the glorious Veda were re-admitted to the Hindu community. They and the Wāghers, who plunder both by land and sea, dwell here and inhabit this country. In Saṅvat 1370 Shams Khān built a mosque in the city, and in Saṅvat 1547 Sūltān Mahmūd Gūjarāti laid waste the country. In Saṅvat 1648, Khān Khānān led an army here in pursuit of Sūltān Muzaffar, but Sangrām and Šawā Wādhel conveyed Muzaffar over to the country of Kachh. In Saṅvat 1526 Malik Toghān was the thānādār here on behalf of Sūltān Mahmūd, and at that time Rājā Bhim was taken prisoner. In Saṅvat 1858 English ships arrived, which cannonaded the fort of Beyt, and several brave men of the English troops landed and made an assault, but by the aid of Śri Dwārkānāth they were unsuccessful and retired. But they burned all the piratical craft of both Dwārkā and Beyt, in which piracies were constantly committed. At that time the author happened to go on a pilgrimage to Śri Ranchoḍ Rāi with a caravan of sixty wagons and one hundred sowārs. Mūlā Mānīk and Vairsi Mānīk came as far as Gūrgadh to meet him, and showed him many civilities; and at Dwārkā the vakils of Bāwā Sādārām, the manager of the temples of Trikamji and Lakhmiji, came to invite him, so the author went to Beyt in a ship, and there paid his vows to Śri Ranchoḍ Rāi, Trikam Rāi, Mādhū Rāi, Purshotam Rāi, and Kāliṇ Rāi, and to Deokoji and Kūseśwar Māhâdeva, and the costs of this pilgrimage amounted to sixty thousand jāmis.

In this country are situated Śankhar Nārāyaṇ, Ād Nārāyaṇ, and Chakra Nārāyaṇ, and Śankhar Talâv; and the temples of Kūseśwar and Kapileśwar and Gaṇapati, and the shrine of Hāji Kimmāni and others in this city are of much benefit both to the better classes and to the commonalty; what more shall I say?

The temple of Jagat, which was built by Rājā Vajranābh, is very lofty, and bathing in the Gomti is famous in every country. As my pen can go no further, my readers will no longer be fatigued.

In Saṃvat 1735 (A.D. 1679), on account of fear of the Mūsalmâns, the idols were conveyed to the island of Beyt. In Saṃvat 1781, Kâkâbhâi and Hâlâbhâi repaired many of the temples at Beyt.

In Saṃvat 1864 the English army, under the command of Colonel Alexander Walker, conquered Positra; and in the year 1875 the English Sarkâr established a thâna, but two years afterwards Hendly Sâheb and Muhammad Atâ, who were the Thânâdârs, after a short struggle were expelled by the Wâghers. Now the abovementioned Hendly Sâheb was of a peaceful and gentle disposition, never injured an ant or killed a fly, nor did he spend a charge of powder or fire a single arrow, but withdrew himself from Okhâ safely without in the least caring for his honour.

In Saṅvat 1876 a powerful English army came and attacked Okhâ both by sea and land and stormed the fort of Dwârkâ. On this occasion many of the Okhâ Wâghers, such as Mûlû Mânîk, Vairsi Mânîk, and others, and most of the tribe of Mânîk numbering in all nearly two hundred and fifty persons, perished in the waters of the Gomti, and an English garrison was placed there. However, according to the policy of the time, they handed this place over to the Gâckwâd, who at once posted Bâbâ Wasikar there as his deputy, with a garrison of two hundred Arabs and Mâk-rânîs.

There is scarcely any water in this country, and on account of the paucity of the inhabitants and abundance of prickly-pear, but little cultivation exists. The Wâghers used to support themselves by committing robberies both by sea and land, and there is nothing here except small shells and chakras (a shell also), and the earth called Gopi-chandan, and a pleasant green appearance, and certain small shells which these jungly folk burn before the dying. Their income is derived from the fees levied from the bands of pilgrims which come to worship Dwârkânâth, and these suffice for the ministrants at the shrine, the Râjâ, and the Wâghers. In this zillâ there are good camels and brave men.

The Râjâ of Kachh built Kachhigaḍh to repress the plunderers of Okhâ, but God knows the truth.

What I have seen or heard from historians that I have consigned to writing as a memorial of this perishable life, and this book I have called —History of Sorath, and I wrote it for the perusal of my beloved and intelligent son Śankarprasad.

THE END.
Published by order of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF WESTERN INDIA.

THE CAVE TEMPLES OF INDIA.

Archæological Surveyor for Western India.

Super-royal 8vo, morocco, gilt top, pp. xx and 536, with Map, 99 plates and 76 woodcuts. £2 2s.

REPORTS.

(Only a few copies for sale.)

With 56 Photographs and Lithographic Plates and 6 Woodcuts. Super-royal 4to, half morocco, gilt top, £2 2s.

Vol. III.—Report on the Antiquities of the Bidar and Aurangabad Districts, being the Results of the Third Season's Operations, 1875-76.

With 66 photo. and lithographic plates and 9 woodcuts. Sup. roy. 4to, £2 2s.
REPORTS OF THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF WESTERN INDIA.

Vols. V. and VI. containing further Illustrations of Buddhist and Hindu Cave Architecture in Western India, with Translations of Inscriptions, &c. &c.

Super-royal 4to, half-morocco, gilt top, with numerous Plates, Woodcuts, &c. Price—the two volumes—£6 6s.

Vol. IV.—The Buddhist Caves and their Inscriptions, with many plates and woodcuts, is now ready.

LONDON: TRübNER & Co., &c.

BOMBAY: Orders received by Thacker & Co., Limited.

SCENERY AND ARCHITECTURE IN GUJARAT AND RAJPUTANA.

Price Rs. 100.

SIMLA, CALCUTTA, and BOMBAY: Bourne and Shepherd, Photographers; LONDON: Marion & Co., Soho Square.

With 12 Photographs Rs. 4-8.

WEBER ON THE RAMAYANA.

This edition is published with corrections and additions by Prof. Weber,—12mo, 130 pages.

BOMBAY: EDUCATION SOCIETY'S PRESS.

Published monthly, 4to demy, with Illustrations,

THE INDIAN ANTIQUARY;

A JOURNAL OF ORIENTAL RESEARCH

In Archaeology, History, Literature, Languages, Philosophy, Folklore, &c., &c.

Edited by

By JAS. BURGESS, LL.D., F.R.G.S., M.R.A.S.

Annual Subscription in advance Rs. 20, or including postage to Europe £2.

Vols. II. to X. together Rs. 200.
Vols. IV. to X. bound in cloth Rs. 20 each.
Vol. XI. began with the part for January 1882.

BOMBAY: EDUCATION SOCIETY'S PRESS.

Jan. 1882.
The borrower must return this item on or before the last date stamped below. If another user places a recall for this item, the borrower will be notified of the need for an earlier return.

Non-receipt of overdue notices does not exempt the borrower from overdue fines.

Harvard College Widener Library
Cambridge, MA 02138    617-495-2413

Please handle with care.

Thank you for helping to preserve library collections at Harvard.