Manu, us, m. (Ved.) thought, mental faculty (= manana-sakti) (Ved.) a sacred text, prayer, incantation, spell (= mantra, perhaps erroneously thus explained in Mahā-bh. Ādi-p. 52); (Ved.) a man, mankind, as opposed to evil spirits, (in R̥g-veda III. 60, 3, the Ribhus are called the sons of man, manor napātāh); the Man par excellence, or the representative man and father of the human race (regarded in the earlier mythological system as the first to have instituted sacrifices and religious ceremonies; and in R̥g-veda I. 139, 9, associated with the R̥shis Kanva and Atri; in the Aitareya-Brāhmaṇa described as dividing his possessions among some of his sons to the exclusion of one called Nabhānedishṭha, q. v.; called Sāmvarāṇa as author of R̥g-veda IX. 101, 10-12; Ṇsava as author of R̥g-veda IX. 106, 7-9; in the fifth chapter of the Nighaṇṭava numbered among the thirty-one divine beings of the upper sphere, and as father of men even identified with Prajā-pati; but the name Manu is especially applied to fourteen successive mythical progenitors and sovereigns of the earth, described in the code of Manu I. 63 and in the later mythology as creating and supporting this world of moving and stationary beings through successive Antaras or long periods of time, see manv-antara, col. 2: the first in order of these Manus is called Svāyambhuva, as sprung from Svayam-bhū, the Self-existent, who being identified with Brahmā, according to one account, divided himself into two persons, male and female, whence was produced Virāj, and from him the first Manu; or who, according to another account, converted himself at once into the first man called Manu Svāyambhuva, and the first woman called Sata-rūpā; this Manu Svāyambhuva is described in Manu I. 34 as a sort of secondary creator, who commenced the work of creation by producing ten Prajāpatis or Maharshis, of whom the first was Marīcī, Light, see prajā-pati; and to this first Manu is ascribed both the celebrated law-book known as the 'code of Manu,' see manu-saṁhitā, as well as an ancient Sūtra work on Kalpa or Vedic ritual; he is himself sometimes called Prajā-pati, and rarely Hairanya-garbhā as son of Hiranya-garbhā, and Prācetasā as son of Prācetas; the next five Manus in regular succession are called Svārocīsha, Auttami, Tāmasa, Raiyata, Cākshusha: the seventh Manu, called Vai-vasvata, Sun-born, is the Manu of the present period; he is held to be the son of Vivasvat or the Sun, who according to Rāmāyaṇa II. 110, 6, was the son of Kāśyapa, son of Marīcī, this latter being described as proceeding directly from Brahmā, and thus adding to the confusion in the different Hindū accounts of the gradation of personages interposed between the Supreme Being and the created world; this seventh Manu, called Vaivasvata, and sometimes, from his piety, Satya-vrata, is regarded as the progenitor of the present race of living beings, and has been compared to the Noah of the Old Testament from various legends current in Sanskrit literature of his preservation from a great flood by Vishnu or, according to some, by Brahmā in the form of a fish: he is also variously described as the son of Āditya or as one of the twelve Ādityas, as the author of the hymns R̥g-veda VIII. 27-31, as the brother of Yama, who as son of the Sun is also called Vaivasvata, as the founder and first king of Ayodhyā, afterwards reigned over by his son Ikshvāku, and as father of Ilā who married Budha, son of the Moon, the two great solar and lunar races being thus nearly related to each other; the eighth Manu or first of the future Manus, according to the Vishnu-Purāṇa III. 2, will be Sāvartī; the ninth, Dakṣha-sāvartī; the tenth, Brahmā-sāvartī; the eleventh, Dharmā-sāvartī; the twelfth, Rudra-sāvartī; the thirteenth, Rāucya or, according to some, Deva-sāvartī; and the fourteenth, Bhautya or Indra-sāvartī); (avas), m. pl. the mental faculties; a symbolical expression for the number fourteen; (us), f. मा 1. mā, ind. (causing a following ch to be changed to chh, see Gram. 48. c), a particle of prohibition and of negation, usually translatable by 'not,' or sometimes used as a conjunction and equivalent to 'that—not, lest, would that—not;' [cf. the use of Gr. μή; Lat. ne.] Mā is most commonly employed in prohibition or deprecation, when it may be joined with the imperative (e. g. mā brūhi, speak not; mā lajjasva, be not ashamed; māivaṇ vada, speak not thus); often also with the aorist, especially in later Sanskrit, when the augment is generally dropped (e. g. mā krithāh, do not make; mā tyākshih, do not abandon; mā śucah, grieve not; mā bhāishih, fear not; mā ninaśah, destroy not; nyathā mānubhūh, feel not pain; or with the sense 'lest,' as in Manu VIII. 15, dharmo na hantavyo mā no dharmo hūto vadhī, justice must not be destroyed, lest justice being destroyed destroy us); often with addition of the particle sma (e. g. mā sma vadīh, speak not; mā sma gamaḥ, go not); sometimes with the imperfect, the augment being still cut off (e. g. mā sma bhavat, may he not become; mā sma karot, let him not do; mainam abhishāshathāh, do not speak to him, cf. Pāṇ. VI. 4, 74); occasionally, in epic poetry &c., with an aorist, without elision of the augment (e. g. mā kālas tvām aty-agāt, let not the season pass by thee; śradddhā no mā vyagamat, may faith not depart from us); not unfrequently with the potential, in the sense of 'wishing that anything may not happen' (e. g. mā sma janayet putram idriśam, may she not bring forth such a son! mā Yamam paśyeyam, may I not see Yama! mā kiṛyād akāryam, O that he may do nothing wrong!); and even with the precative (e. g. mā bhūyāt, may it not be!); more rarely with the potential, in the sense of 'prohibition' (e. g. mā smainam pratyudikshethāh, do not look at him); sometimes with the future, in the sense of 'lest, that—not' (e. g. mā tvām śapsye, lest I curse thee, that I may not curse thee); even with the fut. pass. part. (maivam prārthyam, it must not be so requested); and even with the pres. part. (e. g. mā jīvan yo dukkha-dagdhō jīvati, he ought not [to be] living who lives consumed by pain); sometimes mā takes the place of the simple negative na (e. g. gaccha vā mā vā, you can go or not go; mā jētavyah, he is not to be conquered; mā gantum arhasi, thou oughtest not to go; katham mā bhūit, how may it not be!); occasionally without a verb, which must be supplied from the context (e. g. mā śabdām, i. e. with ellipsis of kuruta, do not make a noise; mā nāma rakshīṇah, may it not be the watchmen! maivam or mā tāvat, not so, i. e. let it not be so; or with mā repeated, thus mā mā, mā maivam). In the Veda mā is sometimes followed by the particle u, blending with it into mo (e. g. Ṛig-veda V. 65, 6, mā meghonaḥ pari khyatam mo asmākam [putrān], deny us not who are rich in offerings, nor indeed our sons [according to Sāy. mo=maiva]; and Ṛig-veda I. 38, 6, mo shu vadhīti [Sāy.=sarvathā vadham mā kārsihī]), let him not on any account destroy; [cf. Zend and Old Pers. mā; Gr. μή; perhaps Lat. ne.] — Mā-śira, as, ā, am, not long, short; (am), ind. without delay, shortly, quickly (generally after an impv. or before an aor. without augment, and sometimes for na-śiram, e. g. gaccha mā-śiram or mā-śiraṇ gamah, go without delay; vrajīsh-yāmi mā-śiram, I will set forth without delay). — Mā-vilambam or mā-vilambitam, ind. without delay, shortly, quickly.

Mīmāṅsaka, as, m. one who thinks over or reflects deeply upon, one who examines or proves; an examiner, investigator, prover; a follower of the Pūrva-mīmāṅsā system, (see below.)

Mīmāṅsana, as, m. one who examines or proves, a tester, prover, examiner, investigator.

Mīmāṅsā, f. reflection, consideration, opinion, investigation, examination, discussion, (kāvya-m°, the theory of poetry, art of poetry; N. of a work); 'examination (of the sacred text),' N. of one of three great divisions of orthodox Hindū philosophy (divided like the Nyāya and Sāṅkhya into two systems, viz. the Pūrva-mīmāṅsā or Karma-mīmāṅsā founded by Jaimini, and the Uttara-mīmāṅsā or Brahma-mīmāṅsā or Sātrika-mīmāṅsā by Bādarāyaṇa, the latter, however, is more commonly called the Vedānta system, while the Pūrva-mīmāṅsā is usually called the Mīmāṅsā; though the Mīmāṅsā by Jaimini is classed among the six orthodox systems of philosophy, it does not concern itself like the others with the nature of soul, mind, and matter, but rather with a correct interpretation of the ritual of the Veda and the solution of doubts and discrepancies in regard to the Vedic texts caused by the discordant explanations of opposite schools; it may therefore be described as a critical commentary on the first or ritual portion of the Veda, and its only claim to the title of a philosophy consists in its philosophical method of interpretation, the topics being arranged according to particular categories, such as authoritativeness, indirect precept, &c., and treated according to a kind of logical sequence, which commences with the proposition to be discussed, the doubt arising about it, the Pūrva-pakṣa or primā facie and wrong view of the question, the right argument or refutation of the Pūrva-pakṣa, and the conclusion; see, moreover, Pūrva-mīmāṅsā: Jaimini, whose date is unknown, taught his system in twelve books, each book containing either four or eight chapters, and each chapter being subdivided into sections comprising one or more Sūtras; the oldest commentary on these obscure aphorisms being the Bhāṣya of Sabara-svāmin, explained by the great Mīmāṅsā authority Kumārila-svāmin or Kumārila-bhaṭṭa, and again elucidated by Madhavācārya in the Jaiminiya-nyāya-māla-vistara. - Mīmāṅsā-kṛit, t, m. 'the author of the Mīmāṅsā system,' an epithet of Jaimini. - Mīmāṅsā-kautūhala-vṛitti, is, f., N. of a commentary by Vāśudeva Adhvarin (also called Vāśudeva Dikshita) on the Mīmāṅsā-sūtras of Jaimini. - Mīmāṅsā-kavutubha, as, m., N. of a commentary by Khaṇḍa-deva on the Mīmāṅsā-sūtras of Jaimini. - Mīmāṅsā-jiva-rakṣā, f., N. of a Mīmāṅsā work. - Mīmāṅsā-tattva-candrikā, f., N. of a work by Gopāla-bhaṭṭa on various Mīmāṅsā topics. - Mīmāṅsā-tantra-vārttika, am, n., N. of a commentary by Kumārila-svāmin on the Sūtras of Jaimini. - Mīmāṅsā-naya-viveka, as, m., N. of a commentary by Bhavanātha-miśra on the Mīmāṅsā-sūtras of Jaimini. - Mīmāṅsā-nyāya-prakāśa, as, m., N. of a celebrated elementary work on the Mīmāṅsā system by Āpa-deva (son of Ananta-deva and pupil of Govinda). - Mīmāṅsā-paribhāṣā, f., N. of an elementary treatise by Kṛishṇa-dikshita on the Mīmāṅsā. - Mīmāṅsā-bhāṣya-vivaraṇa, am, n., N. of a commentary by Kumārila-svāmin on a work entitled Mīmāṅsā-bhāṣya. - Mīmāṅsārtha-pradīpa ('sā-ar'), as, m., N. of a disquisition by San-kara-śukla on the provableness of the Veda. - Mīmāṅsā-vidhī-bhāṣya, am, n., N. of a Mīmāṅsā work by Gopāla-bhaṭṭa, written in refutation of the Vidhi-rasāyana. - Mīmāṅsā-śromāṇi, is, m. 'crest-gem of the Mīmāṅsā,' epithet of an author, (also called Nīla-kaṇṭha.) - Mīmāṅsā-sarvasva, am, n., N. of a work by Halāyudha. - Mīmāṅsā-sūtra, am, n., N. of the twelve books of aphorisms by Jaimini on the interpretation of the Veda; see Mīmāṅsā, col. 2. - Mīmāṅsā-stavaka, as, m., N. of a Mīmāṅsā work by Rāghavananda.

Yajus, us, n. religious reverence, veneration, worship, oblation, sacrifice (Ved.); that by which a sacrifice is effected, a sacrificial prayer or formula; a text of the Yajur-veda or rather a technical term for certain words or Mantras muttered in a peculiar manner at a sacrifice, (these Mantras were properly in prose as distinguished from the metrical ric which was recited, and the metrical sāman which was sung, see mantra, 2. ric); although, however, the prose Yajus is a distinctive feature of the Yajur-veda, this Yajus is in real fact chiefly composed of verses taken from the R̥g-veda, which may then also be called Yajus, cf. Yajur-veda below); N. of the Yajur-veda, q. v., (in this sense also frequently yajūshī, n. pl.); (us), m., N. of a man. — Yajush-sākhin, ī, inī, i, familiar with a Sākhā of the Yajur-veda. — Yajur-maya, as, ī, am, consisting of verses of the Yajur-veda; [cf. rim-maya.] — Yajur-lakshmi, is, f., N. of a particular formula. — Yajur-vid, t, t, t, knowing the Yajus, conversant with sacrificial formulas, one who is familiar with the Yajur-veda. — Yajur-vidhāna, am, n., N. of a work. — Yajur-veda, as, m. 'the sacrificial Veda,' the collective body of sacred Mantras or texts which constitute the Yajur-veda, (these Mantras, though often consisting of the prose Yajus, are frequently identical with the Mantras of the R̥g-veda, the Yajur-veda being only a collection of liturgical forms or rather a sort of sacrificial prayer-book for the Adhvaryu priests formed out of the R̥g-veda, which had to be dissected and re-arranged with additional texts for sacrificial purposes; to serve these purposes, the hymns of the R̥g-veda are scattered about piecemeal, verses of the same hymn being often transposed, verses from different hymns combined, and even those of different poets brought together into one and the same hymn; in fact the compilation of the Yajur-veda resulted from the gradual growth of a complicated ritual in connection with those sacrifices without which the Hindū believed it was impossible to secure the favour of his gods, and for the performance of which the unsystematic collection of hymns in the R̥g-veda was unsuited: the great characteristic feature of the Yajur-veda is its division into two distinct collections of texts, the one called Taittirīya-saṃhitā or Kṛishṇa, i. e. 'Black' [because in it the Saṃhitā or simple collection of texts and Brāhmaṇa or explanation of the rites in which the texts were employed is confinised]; the other called Vājasaneyi-saṃhitā or Sukla, i. e. 'White' [because in this, which is thought to be the more recent of the two recensions, the Saṃhitā is cleared from confusion with its Brāhmaṇa, and therefore looks white and orderly]; the order of sacrifices, however, of both divisions of the Yajur-veda is similar, two of the principal being the Darśa-pīma-māsa or sacrifice to be performed at new and full moon, and the Āśva-medha or horse-sacrifice; cf. Taittirīya-saṃhitā, Vājasaneyi-saṃhitā. — Yajurveda-srāddha, N. of a work (treating of the prayers and rites to be used at the anniversaries of the death of parents according to the school of the Yajur-veda). — Yajur-vedin, i, inī, t, familiar with the Yajur-veda. — Yajurvedi-vrīshotsarga-tattva ('sha-ut'), am, n., N. of part of the Smṛiti-tattva by Raghunandana on the release of a bull according to the teaching of the Yajur-veda. — Yajurvedi-srāddha-tattva, am, n., N. of certain verses by Raghunandana on the anniversaries of the death of parents according to the school of the Yajur-veda. — Yajush-kṛita, as, ā, am, Ved. performed with a Yajus, consecrated or dedicated with a sacrificial formula. — Yajush-kṛiti, is, f., Ved. consecration or dedication with a sacrificial formula. — Yajush-kriyā, f., Ved. a rite or ceremony accompanied with a Yajus. — Yajush-tama, Ved. superl. of yajus. — Yajush-tara, Ved. compar. of yajus. — Yajush-tas, ind., Ved. from a Yajus; in relation to a Yajus; on the authority of the Yajur-veda. — Yajush-tū, f. or yajush-tva, am, n., Ved. the state of a Yajus. — Yajush-pati, is, m. यद् yad, yas, yā, yad (the actual base of this relative pronoun is ya, except in compounds and in the derivative yadiya; its proper correlative is tad, q. v., but other demonstrative pronouns and pronominals, such as etad, idam, adas, tādriṣa, ūdrīṣa, sarva, often occur in the correlative clauses; see 3. ya), who, which, what, that, whoever, whichever, whatever, any. The relative yad often precedes the noun to which it refers, this noun being either put in the same case with the relative or joined with the demonstrative (e. g. yasya narasya buddhīḥ sa balavān or yasya buddhīḥ sa narō balavān, of whatever man there is intellect he is strong); sometimes the relative stands alone, an antecedent noun or pronoun being understood from which it takes its gender and number (e. g. dhānena kim yo na dadāti, what is the use of wealth [to him] who does not give?); or the relative itself may be dropped (e. g. na karoty a-kāryam tam āryam āhuh, they call him honourable [who] does nothing improper to be done). Sometimes the relative yad, with or without its demonstrative, appears to be used redundantly to eke out the metre, or perhaps to give force to the noun with which it is connected, even the neut. sing. being occasionally thus used in connection with words of a different gender and number, and the relative being itself almost untranslatable (e. g. yan maraṇam so 'sya vīśrāmah, that very death is his rest; andho jadaḥ pīṭha-sarpī saptatyā śhāvīś-śa yah, a blind man, an idiot, a cripple, and a man seventy years old; yat kṣhāntīḥ samaye śrutiḥ Śiva Śivety-uktir mano-nīrṛṣṭir asau multī-mārga śhīṭī, forbearance, obedience to ordinances, saying 'Śiva, Śiva,' contentment of mind, this is continuance on the road of emancipation); and sometimes this redundant or emphatic use of yad causes a sudden change of construction from accusative to nominative (e. g. apoheta rasām asmano lavaṇam cāiva paśavo ye śa, he should avoid liquids, stones, and salt, and all cattle). The relative yad is often repeated to express 'whoever,' 'whatever,' 'whichever,' &c. (e. g. yo yah, whatever man; yā yā, whatever woman; yad yad, whatever thing; yo yo yavātīṭhaḥ, whichever [is] how many soever degrees, i. e. in proportion as each of which is advanced in the series); or the repetition of yad may be caused by a kind of attraction, the second relative being equivalent to an indefinite pronoun (e.g. yo yasya bhāvah syāt, whatever may be the disposition of any one; yad rocate yasmai, whatever is pleasing to any one); or the relative may be used to express similar indefinite meanings when joined with kaścīt, kaścana, ko 'pi, kaśca, ko vā (e.g. yah kaścīt or yah-kaścāna, whosoever; yat kiñcīt or yat kiñca, whatsoever; yena kenāpy upāyena, by any means whatsoever; yāni kāni ča mītrāni, any friends whatsoever; yasmat kasmāi ča, to any one whatever; yasmin kasmīn vā dce, in any country whatever); or even with a demonstrative pronoun (e.g. yasmat tasmāi, to any one whatever; yasmāt tasmāt, from any one, from this or that person; yena tena karmaṇā, by any act whatever); or sometimes the relative yad is used alone with the indefinite sense 'any one,' &c. (e.g. striyaṃ spriśed yah sangrahaṇam smṛitam, should any one touch a woman it is called an adulterous act; yām ajām vṛiko hanyāt pale tat kilviṣam bhavet, if a wolf kill any she-goat the blame must be on the keeper). Yad is also connected in a peculiar manner with the personal pronouns, which, when placed immediately after the relative, appear to derive force or emphasis from this juxtaposition (e.g. yo 'ham, I that very person who; yas team, thou that very one who, &c.). Yad in the neut. sing. is used as an adverbial conjunction equivalent to 'for which reason,' 'on which account,' 'wherefore,' 'since,' 'as,' 'because,' 'when,' 'while,' 'if,' 'with regard to,' 'as to,' &c.; or still oftener as a simple conjunction meaning 'that,' especially after the verbs of saying, hearing, &c., or such words as kāma, yukta, āśčarya, &c. (e.g. dhīvarair uktaṃ yat —, it was said by the fishermen that —; śrutam trayāṃ yat —, it has been heard by thee that —; āśčaryaṃ yat —, it is a wonder that —); frequently followed by a verb in the indicative (e.g. ayam nūtano nāyayo yad arātīm hatvā santāpāḥ kriyate, this is a new doctrine that having killed an enemy remorse is experienced); less frequently in the potential (e.g. esha me kāmo yat sa rājyaṃ āpnuyāt, this is my desire that he may obtain the kingdom); yad api, although; yac-ča, that (according to Pāṇ. III. 3, 148, with potential, after expressions of impossibility, disbelief, hope, disregard, reproach, and wonder, e.g. na śrad-dadhe yac-ča tatra-bhavān vṛiṣhalam yajayet, I do not believe that your Highness will allow a Śūdra to sacrifice); yad vā, or, or else, whether, (in the writings of commentators yad vā generally occurs when an alternative reading or meaning is proposed, and may commonly be translated by 'or,' 'or else'); in philosophical writings yah is said to be used as a synonym for puruṣah: [cf. Zend ya; Gr. ῥ-ς, ῥ, ῥ, ῥ, ῥ, ῥ; Goth. ja-bai, 'if'; jav, 'whether'; Lith. ji-s, 'he'; ji, 'she'; ju, 'it'; Slav. i, ja, je.] — Yac-čhandas, ās, ās, as, having which metre. — Yac-čhīla, as, ā, am (yad + śīla), having which disposition. — Yat-kara, as, ī, am, which doing or undertaking. — Yat-kāma, as, ā, am, Ved. which desiring, wishing which. — Yat-kāmyā, ind., Ved. with which view or design. — Yat-kāraṇam or yat-kāraṇāt, ind. for which cause or reason, on which account, in consequence of which; since, because, as, while. — Yat-kārin, i, īnī, i, which doing or undertaking. — Yat-kiñcīdam (čā-īlam), the commencement of the sacred text Rīg-veda VII. 89, 5, (incorrectly read yat-kiñcīdam). — Yat-kṛite, ind. on account of which, for which reason, wherefore, why. — Yat-kṛatu, us, us, v, Ved. having which resolution, forming which plan. — Yad-abhāve, ind. in the absence of which, for want of which, in default of which. — Yad-ārtha, as, ā, am, having which object in view, having which intention; (am, e), ind. on which account, for which purpose, for the sake of which, wherefore, why, &c.; as, since, when, because, whereas. — Yad-ātma, as, ikā, am, having which being or existence. — Yad-ričchā, f, acting as one lists, following one's own inclination, self-will, spontaneity, wilfulness, independence, (according to native lexicographers = svairitā, svēčhā, svāčchāndya, wirni-mitta); accident, an accidental occurrence or event, chance, contingency, (yad-ričchayā, as one likes, or one's own accord, spontaneously, by accident, accidentally, incidentally, by chance, unexpectedly); (in grammar) a noun which is neither a generic nor specific term nor noun of agency, one either not derived from authority or not possessing meaning. — Yadričchā-tas, ind. spontaneously, by accident, &c. (= yad-ričchayā above). — Yadričchābhijña (čhā-abh), as, m, a voluntary or self-offered witness. — Yadričchā-lābha-tuṣṭa, as, ā, am, satisfied with obtaining what comes spontaneously, easily satisfied. — Yadričchā-saṃvāda, as, m, accidental or spontaneous conversation, incidental intercourse. — Yadričchika, as, m, scil. putra, a son who offers himself for adoption. — Yad-devata or yad-devatyā, as, ā, am, Ved. having which god-head or divinity. — Yad-dvandva, am, n, N, of a Sāman. — Yad-dhetos, ind. (dhetos for hetos, abl. c. of hetu), from which reason or cause, on which account. — Yad-bhaviṣhya, as, m, one who says 'what will be,' or 'what must be must be,' one who believes in the power of fate; a fatalist; N, of a fish (in the Hitopadeśa). — Yadriyaṇē or yadriyaṇē, an, drīcī, ak (fr. yad with adri substituted for ad and rt. anī; cf. madriyaṇē), Ved. moving or turning in which direction, extending to which point, reaching whither or to what place or in which direction, (incorrectly written yadriyaṇē, yadriyaṇē). — Yad-vat, ind. in which way, as, (used as a correlative of tad-vat and evam). — Yad-vada, as, ā, am, talking anything, talking nonsense, saying no matter what. — Yadvāhishṭhya, am, n, (fr. yad vāhishṭham, the first two words of Rīg-veda V. 25, 7), N, of a Sāman. — Yad-vidha, as, ā, am, of which sort (= Lat. qualis). — Yad-erīta, am, n, anything which has occurred, an adventure; any form of yad. — Yan-nimittam, ind. on which account, for which reason, in consequence of which, through which. — Yanmanḥishṭhya, am, n, N, of a Sāman. — Yan-madhya, ind. in the centre of which. — Yan-maya, as, ī, am, formed or consisting of which. — Yan-mātra, as, ā, am, having which measure, of which dimensions or circumference, &c. — Yan-mūrdhan, ā, m, the head of whom.

Yadā, ind. at what time, when, whenever, (generally followed in the correlative clause by tadā or tatas or tarhi or in Ved. by ād it); whereas, since, as; if; yadā yadā, whenever; yadā tadā, at any time whatsoever; yadā yadā—tadā tadā, as often as—so often; yadāiva—tadāiva, when indeed—then indeed; yadā prabhṛiti—tadā prabhṛiti, from whatever time—from that time forward; yadā-kadā-ča, Ved. as often as, whenever; yadā-kadā-čit, at any time; na yadā-kadā-čit, never at any time; yadā is sometimes joined in the same sentence with other relatives used indefinitely (e.g. yo 'tti yasya yadā māṃsam, when any one eats the flesh of any one).

Yadī, ind. (in Ved. sometimes lengthened to yadī), if, in case that; whether; if haply, if perchance; provided that, when. As a conjunction meaning 'if,' yadī is sometimes joined with the present indicative (e.g. yadī jivati bhadrāṇi paśyati, if he live he will behold prosperity); sometimes with the potential (e.g. yadī rājā dandaṃ na praṇayet, if the king were not to inflict punishment; or with omission of yadī, e.g. vṛiko hanyād ajām, if a wolf should kill a goat); sometimes with the future (e.g. yadī na karishyanī tat, if they will not do that); sometimes with the aorist or even imperfect or perfect (e.g. yadī Prajā-patir na vapur asrākṣit, if the Creator had not created the body; yady etan na me 'kathayāt, if he were not to tell me that; yady āha, if he had said); sometimes with the conditional (e.g. yady anujāam adāsyat, if he should give permission); sometimes yadī may be translated by 'that' (e.g. nāsanse yadī jivanti, I do not expect that they are alive); rarely yadī is joined redundantly with čed (e.g. yadī čet syāt, if it should be); or with purā (e.g. purā yadī paśyāmi, before that I see); yady-api, even if, although, (followed by tathāpi, q. v., or tadapi in the correlative clause); yadī vā, or if, or whether; or else, or; or rather (= atha vā); yadī—yadī vā, yadī vā—yadī vā, yadī vā—vā, if—or if, whether—or.

II. 22. fr. rt. 1. rud above ; according to others fr. rt. 1. ru + dra fr. rt. 2. dru, to run ; connected with rodas, q. v., and perhaps with rudhira), crying, howling, roaring, one who cries or roars, dreadful, horrible, terrific, awful ; great, large ; (according to the fanciful etymologies of native writers, the following meanings are also assigned to this word), driving away evil ; running about and roaring ; praiseworthy, to be praised, (according to Naigh. III. 16) = stotrī, a praiser, panegyrist, worshipper ; (as), m. 'the Roarer' or 'Howler,' N. of the god of tempests and father of the Rudras or Maruts, (originally perhaps the mere personified roaring of the storms, but as the crackling or raging of fire may resemble the sound of wind, so in the Veda the god of storms is sometimes identified with the god of fire ; though generally represented as a destroying deity whose terrible shafts bring death or disease on men and cattle, he is also addressed as benevolent and auspicious [śiva], and is even supposed to have a healing efficacy from his chasing away vapours and purifying the atmosphere ; hence he has various epithets in the Veda, such as 'multiform,' 'terrible as a wild beast,' 'tawny-coloured,' 'wearing braided hair' [kaparāḍin], 'celestial boar,' 'armed with a strong bow and fleet arrows,' 'cause of prosperity to man and beast,' 'possessor of healing remedies,' 'greatest of physicians,' &c. ; he is of course ruler of the Rudras, who are the same as the storm winds, more usually called Maruts, and who are often associated with Indra [see marut] : in the later mythology the epithet śiva, 'propitious,' which does not occur as a name in the Veda, was employed as the real name of the destroying deity, being at first applied as an euphemism to propitiate him : moreover the character of the deity lost its special connection with storms, and developed into a personification of the destroying principle generally, though even the Epic and Purānic Śiva was regarded as the generator as well as destroyer : moreover a new class of beings, described as eleven in number, though still called Rudras, took the place of the original Rudras or Maruts : in the Veda only three groupings of deities into classes appear to be recognised, Indra belonging to the Vasus, Varuṇa to the Ādityas, and Rudra to the Rudras or Maruts ; but in Manu XI. 221. the Maruts are enumerated as a fourth group, being there distinguished from the eleven Rudras : in Vishnu-Purāṇa I. 7. Rudra is said to have sprung from Brahmā's forehead, and to have afterwards separated himself into a figure half male and half female, the former portion separating again into the eleven Rudras, who were so called because they 'ran about crying aloud' [rudānād drāvaṇāc-ā, cf. rts. 1. rud, 2. dru] ; hence these later Rudras are sometimes regarded as inferior manifestations of Śiva, and most of their names are also names of Śiva ; these names are variously given in the different Purāṇas ; those of the Vāyu are Ajaiikapād ; Ahvi-bradhna, Hara, Nir-ṛita, Īśvara, Bhuvana, Angāraka, Archa-keṭu, Mṛityu, Sarpa, Kapālin : according to other accounts the Rudras are represented as children of Kaśyapa and Surabhī or of Brahmā and Surabhī or of Bhūta and Su-rūpā) ; a form or manifestation or N. of Śiva (in the later mythology, as explained above ; according to the Vishnu-Purāṇa I. 8. Rudra is one of the eight forms of Śiva ; he is elsewhere reckoned among the Dik-pālas as regent of the north-east quarter) ; a symbolical expression for the number eleven (from the eleven Rudras, see above) ; a mystical epithet of the letter e ; Calotropis Gigantea ; N. of various persons ; of a lexicographer ; of a poet ; of a king ; (ās), m. pl. the Rudras (described above) ; an abbreviated expression for the texts or hymns addressed to the Rudras [cf. rudra-japa] ; (ā), f., N. of a wife of Vasu-deva ; of a daughter of Raudraśva ; = rudra-jaṭā ; (ī), f. a kind of lute or guitar ; [cf. rudra-ṛiṇā ; cf. perhaps also Gr. λύρα.] = Rudra-kulasa, am, n. 'Rudra's vessel,' a particular kind of pot or vessel used in making oblations to the planets. = Rudra-kavindra ('rt-in'), as, m. a proper N. Varu, us, m., Ved., N. of a king.

Varuṇa, as, m., 'Universal compasser, All-enveloper,' N. of an Āditya, (as a Vedic deity commonly associated with Mitra and presiding over the night as Mitra over the day [see I. nītra]), but often celebrated separately, whereas Mitra is rarely invoked alone; Varuṇa is one of the oldest of the Vedic gods, corresponding in name and partly in character to the Oûpanôs of the Greeks, and is often regarded as the supreme deity, being then styled 'king of the gods' or 'king of both gods and men' or 'king of the universe;' no other deity has such grand attributes and functions assigned to him; he is described as fashioning and upholding heaven and earth, as possessing extraordinary power and wisdom called mâyā, as sending his spies or messengers throughout both worlds, as numbering the very winkings of men's eyes, as hating falsehood, as seizing transgressors with his pāsa or noose, as inflicting diseases, especially dropsy, as pardoning sin, as the guardian of immortality; though generally associated with Mitra, he is also invoked in the Veda together with Indra, and in later Vedic literature together with Agni, with Yama, and with Vishṇu; in R̥g-veda IV. 1, 2, he is even called the brother of Agni; though not generally regarded in the Veda as a god of the ocean, yet he is often connected with the waters, especially the waters of the atmosphere or firmament, and in one place [R̥g-veda VII. 64. 2] is called with Mitra Sindhu-pati, 'lord of the sea or of rivers;' hence in the later mythology he became a kind of Neptune, and is there best known in his character of god of the ocean; in the Mahā-bhārata Varuṇa is said to be a son of Kardama and father of Pushkara, and is also variously represented as one of the Deva-gandharvas, as a Nāga, as a king of the Nāgas, and as an Asura; he is the regent of the western quarter [cf. loka-pāla] and of the Nakshatra Sata-bhishaj; the Jains consider Varuṇa as a servant of the twentieth Arhat of the present Ava-sarpīṇī; the sun ('the warden off or dispeller of darkness,' cf. R̥g-veda V. 48, 5, Sāy. = tampo-vāraha); the firmament; the ocean, waters; N. of a particular magical formula recited over weapons; the tree Cratēva Roxburghii [cf. varaṇa] (āra), m. pl. Vasishṭha, as, m. (superl. of vasu or vasumat; cf. vasiyas), 'the most wealthy'; N. of a very celebrated Vedic Rishi or inspired sage (owner of the 'cow of plenty,' called Nandini, offspring of Surabhi, which by granting all desires made him, as his name implies, master of every vasu or desirable object; he was the typical representative of Brāhmanical dignity, and the legends of his conflict with Viśvā-mitra, who raised himself from the military to the sacerdotal class, though probably founded on the actual struggles which took place between the Brāhmins and Kshatriyas, were doubtless mostly invented to impress the mind with the power and superiority of the priesthood; a great many hymns of the Ṛig-veda are ascribed to these two great rivals, those of the seventh Maṇḍala, besides some others, being attributed to Vasishṭha, while those of the third Maṇḍala are assigned to Viśvā-mitra; in one of Vasishṭha's hymns he is represented as king Su-dās's family priest, an office to which Viśvā-mitra also aspired; in another hymn Vasishṭha claims to have been inspired by Varuṇa, and in another [Ṛig-veda VII. 33, 11] he is called the son of the Apsaras Urvaśi by Mitra and Varuṇa, whence his patronymic Maitrāvraṇi; in Manu I. 35. he is enumerated among the ten Prajā-patis or Patriarchs produced by Manu Svāyambhuva for the peopling of the universe; in the Mahā-bhārata he is mentioned as the family priest of the solar race or family of Ikshvāku and Rāma-āndra, and in the Purāṇas as one of the arrangers of the Vedas in the Dvāpāra age; in the first and second chapters of the Rāghu-vaṅśa he is described as releasing king Dilpa from his curse of childlessness by directing him to attend upon the cow Nandini in atonement for an offence he had unintentionally committed against the parent cow Surabhi; according to one account Vasishṭha married Ūrjā, 'Strength,' according to another, Arundhatī, one of the Pleiades, by whom he had seven sons [see arundhatī]; other legends make him one of the seven great patriarchal sages regarded as forming the stars of the Great Bear [see rishī]; his name is often written Vasishṭha, q. v., in which case it must be connected with vasā and vasīn; N. of the author of a law-book (perhaps intended to be ascribed to the Vedic Rishi above); (ās), m. pl. the family of Vasishṭha; (Vasishṭhasyānkūśa and Vasishṭhasyā-nupadam, N. of two Sāmans.) = Vasishṭha-tantra, am, n., N. of a Tantra work. = Vasishṭha-putra, ās, m. pl. वि 1. vi, ind. (thought by some to be for an original doi, meaning 'in two parts,' as a preposition or prefix to verbs it is opposed to sam, q. v., and expresses) apart, apart from, asunder, in different directions, to and fro, about, away, away from, off, &c. (e. g. vi-yuj, to disjoin, separate; vi-ly, to tear asunder; vi-kṛi, to scatter in different directions; vi-śal, to move to and fro; vi-śhid, to cut away, cut off); when prefixed to some roots, vi gives a meaning opposite to the idea contained in the simple rt. (e. g. krī, to buy; vi-kṛi, to sell; smṛi, to remember; vi-smṛi, to forget); in other cases it appears either not to affect or simply to intensify that idea [cf. naś, vi-naś, hīns, vi-hīns]. Vi may also be used with verbs or nouns, and other parts of speech derived from verbs, to express 'division' [cf. vi-bhid, vi-bheda, vi-bhaj, vi-bhāga]; 'distinction' [cf. vi-śhā, vi-śhā, vi-śhā, vi-śhā]; 'discrimination' [cf. vy-avāśhid, vy-avāśheda]; 'distribution,' 'arrangement,' 'order' [cf. vi-dhā, vi-dhāna]; 'opposition' [cf. vi-rudh, vi-rodha]; 'discussion,' 'deliberation' [cf. vi-śar, vi-śāra]; 'privation' [cf. vi-nī, vi-nayana]. Vi may also be used with nouns, adjective or substantive, not immediately connected with verbs, to express 'difference' [cf. vi-lakṣhāna]; 'variety' [cf. vi-śitra]; 'distinction' [cf. vi-śhā]; 'intensity,' 'greatness,' 'largeness' [cf. vi-karāla]; 'change' [cf. vi-kāra]; 'manifoldness' [cf. vi-rīdha]; 'contrariety' [cf. vi-loma]; 'impropriety,' 'deviation from right' [cf. vi-janman, vi-karmika]; 'negation' or 'privation' (e. g. vi-janu, devoid of men; in this sense vi is used like nis, q. v., and like 3. a, q. v.); in this latter signification the use of vi often corresponds to that of the Latin dis, &c., and the English prefixes a, ex, de, dis, in, un, &c.; [cf. Old Germ. wi-dar, 'against'; Pers. bi, 'without,' perhaps Lat. vē, in words like re-cors, ve-sanus, vi in di-vi-dere; Lith. be, 'without'; Slav. beč (perhaps = vahis).]

वि 2. vi, is, m. f. (according to Upādi-s. IV. 133, fr. rt. vā, the final of the rt. being rejected; a form vi is also given, and according to some the word vi may be fr. rt. vi), Ved. a goner; a bird [cf. vika]; a horse (from its fleetness); a rein (according to Sāy); epithet of the Soma; of a sacrificer; the eye (?); heaven (?); the region of the wind (?); [cf. Zend vi; Gr. ol-ovó-s, al-ε-ρό-s, áov, άov; Lat. avis, ovum; Old Germ. ei; Angl. Sax. æg.] = 1. vi-gata, am, n. (for 2. see under vi-gam), the flight of birds. = 1. vi-śhāya, am, n. (for 2. see s. v.), the shadow of a flock of birds.
