(said to be fr. rt. av; perhaps originally om, which may be derived fr. ām, and this fr. ā), a word of solemn affirmation and respectful assent (sometimes translated by yes, verily, so be it, and in this sense compared with Amen). It is placed at the commencement of most Hindū works, and as a sacred exclamation may be uttered (but not so as to be heard by ears profane) at the beginning and end of a reading of the Vedas or previously to any prayer. It is also regarded as a partide of auspicious salutation (Hail!). Om appears first in the Upanishads as a mystic monosyllable, and is there set forth as the object of profound religious meditation, the highest spiritual efficacy being attributed not only to the whole word but also to the three sounds a, u, m, of which it consists. In later times om is the mystic name for the Hindū triad, and represents the union of the three gods, viz. a (Viṣṇu), u (Śiva), m (Brahmā). It may also be typical of the three Vedas. Om is usually called praṇava, more rarely aksharam or ekāksharam, and only in later times om-kāra. The Buddhists use om at the commencement of their vidyā śaḍ-aksharī or mystical formula in six syllables (viz. om mānī padme hūm). Lexicographers affirm that besides the above uses, om may imply command or injunction, removal or warding off (Away! Hence!), and be used as an inceptive particle. Grammarians assert that before om a preceding a or ā at the end of a word should be cut off (e. g. vijayonkārah for vijayaonkārah ('ya-on'), thanksgiving for victory; see Gram. 38. b). — Om-kāra, as, m. the sacred and mystical syllable om; the exclamation om; pronouncing the syllable om; (ā), f. a Buddhist Śakti or female personification of divine energy. — Om-kāra-grantha, as, m. title of a work of Nārāyaṇa. — Om-kāra-tīrtha, N. of a Tīrtha. — Om-kāra-bhaṭṭa, as, m., N. of a man.

क

क 1. ka, the first consonant of the alphabet, and the first of the guttural letters, corresponding in sound to k in keep or king. — Ka-kāra, as, m. the letter or sound ka. — Kakāra-varga, as, m. the guttural consonants collectively.

क 2. ka, kas, kū, kim, interrog. pron. (see kim and 2. kad, and cf. the following words in which the interrogative base ka appears, katama, katara, kati, katham, kadā, karhi, kā, &c.), who? which? what? In its declension ka follows the pronoun tad (Gram. 223) except in nom. acc. sing. neut., where kim has taken the place of kad or kat in classical Sanskrit; but the old form kad is found in the Veda.

The interrogative sentence introduced by ka is often terminated by iti (e. g. kasya sa putra iti kathayātāmi, let it be said, 'whose son is he?'), but iti may be omitted and the sentence lose its direct interrogative character (e. g. kasya sa putro na jāyate, it is not known whose son he is). Ka with or without as, 'to be,' may express 'how is it possible that?' 'what power have I, you, they, &c.?' (e. g. ke mama dhanvino nye, what can the other archers do against me? ke āvām paritrātum, what power have we to rescue you?). Ka is often connected with a demonstrative pron. (e. g. ko 'yam āyāti, who comes here?) or with the potential (e. g. ko Hariṃ nindet, who will blame Hari?). Ka is sometimes repeated (e. g. kaḥ ko 'tra, who is there? kān kān, whom? whom? i. e. which of them? cf. Gram. 53. a), and the repetition is often due to a kind of attraction (e. g. keshām kim śāstram adhyayanīyam, which book is to be read by whom? Gram. 836. a). When kim is connected with the inst. c. of a noun or with the indecl. participle it may express 'what is gained by doing so, &c.?' (e. g. nirujah kim aushadhāḥ, what is the use of medicine to the healthy? kim vilambena, what is gained by delay? kim bahunā, what is the use of more words? kim pauruṣam hatvā sūptam, what manliness is there in killing one asleep?).

Ka is often followed by the particles iva, u, nāma, nu, vā, svīd, some of which serve merely to generalize the interrogation (e. g. kim tva etad, what can this be? ka u śrayat, who can possibly hear? ko nāma jānāti, who indeed knows? ko nu ayama, who is this? kim nu kāryam, what is to be done? ko vā devād anyah, who possibly other than a god? kasya evīd hridayam nāsti, of what person is there no heart?).

Ka is occasionally used alone as an indefinite pronoun, especially in negative sentences (e. g. na kasya ko vallabhaḥ, no one is a favourite of any one; nānyo jānāti kaḥ, no one else knows; katham sa ghātayati kam, how does he kill any one? More usually, however, ka is only made indefinite when connected with the particles ca, āna, cid, vā, and api, in which case ka may sometimes be preceded by the relative ya (e. g. ye ke ca, any persons whatsoever; yasyaī kasyaī ca devatāyāi, to any deity whatsoever; yāni kāni ca mitrāni, any friends whatsoever; yat kiñca, whatever). The particle āna, being composed of ca and na, properly gives a negative force to the pronoun (e. g. yasmād Indrād rīte kiñcāna, without which Indra there is nothing), but the negative sense is generally dropped (e. g. kaścāna, any one; na kaścāna, no one), and a relative is sometimes connected with it (e. g. yat kiñcāna, anything whatsoever). Examples of cid with the interrogative are common; vā and api are not so common, but the latter is often found in classical Sanskrit (e. g. kaścīd, any one; kecīd, some; na kaścīd, no one; na kiñcīd api, nothing whatsoever; yaḥ kaścīd, any one whatsoever; kecīt—kecīt, some—others; yasmin kasmin vā deṣe, in any country whatsoever; na ko 'pi, no one; na kimapi, nothing whatever).

Ka may sometimes be used, like 2. kad, at the beginning of a compound. See ka-pūya, &c.

क 3. ka, as, m. the Who? the Inexplicable, the Unknown. By a forced and erroneous interpretation of the interrogative pronoun occurring in a hymn of the R̥g-veda (X. 121. kaśmat devāya havishā vidhema, what god shall we worship with oblations?) the word ka is applied as a name to any chief god or object of worship, as Prajāpati, Brahmā, Viṣṇu; air or wind; the sun; the mind; the soul; Yama; Kāma-deva, the god of love; fire; a peacock; a N. of Dakṣa (a clever or dexterous man?); a knot, joint; the king of the birds; a prince in general; the body; time; wealth; property; sound; light, splendor.

क 4. ka, am, n. (also regarded as ind.), happiness, joy, pleasure; water; the head, hair; a head of hair. (Perhaps this word has arisen from a far-fetched etymology of the word nāka, 'pleasure'; i. e. na-a-ka, 'not-not-pleasure'.) — Ka-ja, as, ā, am, produced in or by water, watery, aquatic; (am), n. a lotus. — Kā-da, as, m. 'giving water,' a cloud.

Kam, ind. See 1. kam, s. v.

क 5. ka, a Taddhita affix much used in forming adjectives. It may also be added to nouns to express diminution, deterioration, or similarity (e. g. putraka, a little son; aśvaka, a bad horse or like a horse).

(e. g. katamena pathā yātās te, by which road have they gone?). Katama is often a mere strengthened substitute for ka, the superlative affix imparting emphasis. Hence it may occasionally be used for 'who or which of two?' (e. g. tayoh katamasmai, to which of these two?). It may optionally be compounded with the word to which it refers (e. g. katamaḥ Kaṅṭhāḥ or katama-kaṅṭhāḥ, which Kaṅṭha out of many?). When followed by ca and preceded by yatama an indefinite expression is formed equivalent to 'any whatsoever,' 'any whatsoever,' &c. (e. g. yatamad eva katamaḥ ca vidyāt, he may know anything whatsoever). In negative sentences katama with ena or katama with api = not even one, none at all (e. g. na katamaḥ-śānāḥ, not even on a single day, on no day at all). In negative sentences katara with ena = neither of the two (e. g. na kataras-śāna jigye, neither of the two was conquered; [cf. In the sense of 'several,' 'some,' kati is generally followed by cid or api (e. g. katicid ahāni, for several or some days). Kati may be used as an adverb with cid in the sense of 'oftentimes,' 'much,' 'in many ways' (e. g. katicit stutaḥ, much or often praised). Kati-kṛivas, ind. how many times? kati-rūha, as, ā, am, of how many kinds? kati-śas, how many at a time?

कथम् *katham (fr. 2. ka), ind. how? in what manner? whence? (e.g. katham etat, how is that? katham idānim, how now? what is now to be done? katham mārātmake tvayi vīśvāsah, how can there be reliance on thee of murderous mind? katham usṛjya tvām gaḥcheyam, how can I go away deserting you? katham buddhivā bhavishyati sā, how will she be when she awakes? katham mṛityuh prabhavati vedavidām, whence is it that death has power over those that know the Veda? katham avagamyate, whence is it inferred?). Sometimes katham merely introduces an interrogation (e.g. katham ātmānam nivedayāmi kathām vā ātmā-pāhāram karomi, shall I declare myself or shall I withdraw?).

Katham is often found in connection with the particles iva, nāma, nu, svīd, which appear to generalize the interrogation (how possibly? &c.); with nu it sometimes = kīnu or kutas (e.g. katham nu, how much more! na kathām nu, how much less!).

Katham is often connected, like kim, with the particles ēna, ēd, and api, which give an indefinite sense to the interrogative (e.g. katham ēna, in no way, not at all). When not itself negative katham ēna = in some way, some how; scarcely, with difficulty; na kathām ēna, in no way; kathācēt, some how or other, by some means or other, in any way, with some difficulty, scarcely, in a moderate degree, a little; na kathācēt, not at all, in no way whatever; na kathācēt na, in no way not, i. e. most decidedly; yathā kathācēt, in any way whatsoever; kathācēt yadi jīvati, it is with difficulty that he lives; katham api, some how or other, with some difficulty, scarcely, a little; katham api na, by no means, not at all. In addition to the above senses lexicographers assert that katham may imply 'amazement, surprise, pleasure, abuse'; [with katham cf. Gr. κατά.]

At the beginning of an adjective compound katham may have the same sense as kim. — Katham-rūpa, as, ā, am, of what shape? — Katham-vīrya, as, ā, am, of what power? — Kathan-kathika, as, ā, am (fr. katham katham), one who is always asking questions, an inquisitive person. — Kathan-kathika-tā, f. questioning, inquiring, inquisitiveness. — Kathan-kathita (?), as, m. an interrogant, one who puts questions. — Kathan-karman, ā, ā, a, how acting? — Kathan-kāram, ind. in which manner? — Kathan-tā, f. enquiry, question, demand. — Katham-pramāna, as, ā, am, of what measure? — Katham-bhāva, as, m. what state? — Katham-bhūta, as, ā, am, how being? of what kind?

2. kathā, ind. (for katham), Ved. how? whence? why? Sometimes merely a particle of interrogation (e.g. kathā śṛiyoti Indrah, does Indra hear? yathā kathā ēa, in any way whatsoever).

कद 2. *kad, ind. (originally the neuter form of the interrogative pronoun ka), Ved. a particle of interrogation, where? Kad is used, like kim, with the particles ēna and ēd (e.g. na kācāna upadīh śṛīve rathasya, not at any time or in any manner is heard the noise of thy chariot; veti dvah kācīd ā, he comes from heaven now and then). Kācīd is sometimes used, like the simple kad, as a particle of interrogation (e.g. kācīd dṛishṭā trayā Damayanti, was Damayanti seen by thee?). Kācīd may sometimes be equivalent to 'I hope that' (e.g. vyādhir na kācīd te śarīram pratibādhate, I hope no illness afflicts thy body).

किम् kim, ind. (originally nom. and acc. sing. n. of २. ka, q. v.), how? whence? wherefore? why?

Kim is much used as a particle of interrogation like the Lat. num, an, sometimes translatable by 'whether?' but oftener serving only like a note of interrogation to mark a question (e. g. kiṃ vyādha vane smin sañcaranti, do hunters roam about in this wood? In an interrogation the verb if un-compounded with a preposition generally retains its accent after kim). To this sense may be referred the kim expressing blame, deficiency, &c., at the beginning of compounds (e. g. kiṃ-rājan, what sort of a king? i. e. a bad king); also the kim prefixed to verbs with a similar meaning (e. g. kim-adhūte, he reads badly). Kim-uta or kim-utavā or kim-uta-uta or kim-athavā-uta, whether—or—or; [cf. uta.]

Kim is very frequently connected with other particles, as follows: kim anga, wherefore then? atha kim, how else? surely; kim api, somewhat, to a considerable extent, rather, much more, still further; kim itī, why? (see itī); kimu or kimuta, how much more? how much less? kiṃ kila, what a pity! (expressing dissatisfaction); kiñca, moreover, further; kiñ-cāna (originally negative = 'in no way'), to a certain degree, a little; kiñcīt, somewhat, a little; kiṃ tarhi, how then? but, however; kiñtu, but, however, nevertheless (bearing the same relation to tu that kiñca bears to ca); kin-nu, whether indeed? (a stronger interrogative than kim alone); how much more? how much less? kin nu khalu, how possibly? (a still stronger interrogative); kim punar, how much more? how much less? kiṃ vā, whether? or whether? or, (often a mere particle of interrogation); kiṃ svit, whether? how? (a mere particle of interrogation like the last).

Kim-yu, us, us, u, Ved. what wishing? = Kim-rājan, ā, m. a bad king. = Kim-rūpa, as, ā, am, of what shape? = Kim-val, ān, atī, at, poor, mean, insignificant. = Kim-vadanta, as, m., N. of an imp or goblin who lies in wait for children. = Kim-vadanti, is or i, f. (In the earlier legends he appears as a great hero and teacher; in the more recent he is deified, and is often represented as a young and amorous shepherd with flowing hair and a flute in his hand. The following are a few particulars of his birth and history as related in the Purāṇas &c.: Vasu-deva, who was a descendant of Yadu and Yayāti, had two wives, Rohiṇī and Devakī. The latter had eight sons, of whom the eighth was Kṛṣhna. Kaṇsa, king of Mathurā and cousin of Devakī, was informed by a prediction that one of these sons would kill him. He therefore kept Vasu-deva and his wife in confinement, and slew their first six children. The seventh was Bala-rāma, who was saved by being abstracted from the womb of Devakī and transferred to that of Rohiṇī. The eighth was Kṛṣhna, who was born with black skin and a peculiar mark on his breast. His father Vasu-deva managed to escape from Mathurā with the child, and favoured by the gods found a herdsman named Nanda, whose wife Yaśodā had just been delivered of a son, which Vasu-deva conveyed to Devakī, after substituting his own in its place. Nanda with his wife Yaśodā took the infant Kṛṣhna and settled first in Gokula or Vraja, and afterwards in Vṛndāvana, where Kṛṣhna and Bala-rāma grew up together, roaming in the woods and joining in the sports of the herdsmen's sons. Kṛṣhna as a youth contested the sovereignty of Indra, and was victorious over that god, who descended from heaven to praise Kṛṣhna, and made him lord over the cattle. Kṛṣhna is described as sporting constantly with the Gopīs or shepherdesses, of whom a thousand became his wives, though only eight are specified, Rādhā being the favourite. Kṛṣhna built and fortified a city called Dvāraka in Gujārat, and thither transported the inhabitants of Mathurā after killing Kaṇsa. Kṛṣhna had various wives besides the Gopīs, and by Rukmiṇī had a son Pradyumna, who is usually identified with Kāma-deva; with Jaiṇas, Kṛṣhna is one of the nine black-Vasu-devas; with Buddhists he is the chief of the black demons, who are the enemies of Buddha and the white demons; N. of a king of the Nāgas; N. of an Asura or demon; N. of Arjuna, the most renowned of the Pāṇḍu princes (so named apparently from his colour as a child, see Mahā-bh. गन्धर्व gandharva or sometimes in post-Vedic writings gandharba, as, m. a Gandharva. Though in later times the Gandharvas are regarded as a class, yet in the Rig-veda rarely more than one is mentioned; he is commonly designated as the 'heavenly Gandharva' (divyo Gandharvah), and sometimes named Viśvā-vasu; his habitation is the sky, or the region of the air and the heavenly waters; his especial duty is to guard the heavenly Soma, which the gods obtain through his intervention. It is obtained for the human race by Indra, who conquers the Gandharva and takes it by force. The heavenly Gandharva is supposed to be a good physician, because the Soma is considered as the best medicine; possibly, however, the word Soma originally denoted not the beverage so called, but the moon, and the heavenly Gandharva may have been the genius or tutelary deity of the moon. It is certain that the heavenly Gandharva and the Soma are sometimes identified. He is also regarded as one of the genii who regulate the course of the Sun's horses; he knows and makes known the secrets of heaven and divine truths generally. He is the parent of the first pair of human beings, Yama and Yami, and has a peculiar mystical power over women and a right to possess them. For this reason he is invoked in marriage ceremonies. Ecstatic states of mind and possession by evil spirits are supposed to be derived from the heavenly Gandharva. With Jains he is an attendant of the seventeenth Arhat of the present Avasarpīṭī. The Gandharvas as a class have the same characteristic features as the one Gandharva; they live in the sky, guard the Soma, are governed by Varuṇa (just as the Apsarasas are governed by Soma), know the best medicines, regulate the course of the asterisms (in one passage of the Vājasaneyi-Saṃhitā twenty-seven being mentioned), follow after women and are desirous of intercourse with them. As soon as a girl becomes marriageable, she belongs to Soma, the Gandharvas, and Agni. The wives of the Gandharvas are the Apsarasas, and like them the Gandharvas are invoked in gambling with dice; they are also feared as evil beings together with the Rakshasas, Kimdins, Piśācas, &c., amulets being worn as a protection against them. In the Satapatha-Brahmaṇa they are called the preceptors of the Rishis. In epic poetry the Gandharvas are the celestial musicians or heavenly singers who form the orchestra at the banquets of the gods, and they belong together with the Apsarasas to Indra's heaven, sharing also in his battles. In the more systematic mythology the Gandharvas constitute one of the classes into which the higher creation is divided (e.g. gods, manes, Gandharvas; or gods, Asuras, Gandharvas, men, &c.). In one passage of the Taittirīya-Āraṇyaka eleven classes of Gandharvas are mentioned. The chief or leader of the Gandharvas is named Citra-ratha. They are sometimes called the creatures of Prajapati or Brahmā. With Jains the Gandharvas constitute one of the eight classes of the Vyantaras. The following meanings are also given to the word gandharva—a singer; the Koil or black cuckoo; the soul after death, and previous to its being born again (corresponding in some respects to the western notion of a ghost); a horse; the sun; a sage, a pious man; a kind of deer, according to some, the musk deer; (ṛ), f. ## ङ

ङ 1. ṅa, the fifth consonant of the Sanskrit alphabet, and the nasal of the first class. No real word in use begins with this letter; it is usually found as the first member of a compound consonant preceded by a vowel; the sound of ṅ corresponds to that of ng in song. — Na-kāra, as, m. the letter or sound ṅa.

ङ 2. na, as, m. an object of sense; desire, wish for any sensual object; an epithet of Siva; (Bhairava).

ङु mu, cl. 1. A. navate, numve, to sound: Desid. numūshate.

च

च 1. ča, the twentieth letter of the alphabet, and first of the second or palatal class of consonants, having the simple sound of ch in church. — Ča-kāra, as, m. the letter or sound ča.

च 2. ča, ind. (a particle and conjunction usually translatable by) and, both, also, moreover, as well as. This conjunction, like the Lat. que and Gr. τε, is usually placed as an enclitic after the word which it connects with what precedes, and when used with the personal pronouns these must appear in their fuller accented forms (e.g. tava ča mama ča, both of thee and of me, not te ča me ča). It connects whole sentences as well as parts of sentences, and seems to have been originally placed after both the words or clauses which it joins together, for in the Rīg-veda the double ča occurs much more frequently than the single (e.g. aḥam ča tvam ča, I and thou). The double ča may also be used somewhat redundantly in classical Sanskrit (e.g. kva hariṇakānām jvītam čātilolam kva ča vajrasārāḥ śarās te, where is both the frail existence of fawns and where are thy adamantine arrows?). In the later literature, however, the first ča is more usually omitted (e.g. aḥam tvam ča), and when more than two things are enumerated only one ča is often found (e.g. tejasā yaśasā lakṣmīyā sthūyā ča parayā, in glory, in fame, in beauty, and in high condition). Elsewhere, when more than two things are enumerated, ča is placed after some and omitted after others (e.g. ṛiṇa-dātā ča vaidyaśca śrotriya nadi, both the payer of a debt and a physician [and] a Brāhman [and] a river). In the Veda and even in classical Sanskrit, when the double ča would generally be used, the second may occasionally be omitted (e.g. Indraśca Somaḥ, both Indra [and] Soma; durbhedyāśca āsu-sandheyāḥ, both difficult to be divided [and] quickly to be united). Rarely ča may imply a reference to certain other words which are not expressed (e.g. kamaṇḍalau ča karakāḥ, the word karakā has the meaning 'pitcher' and other meanings).

Ča may be used for vā and is then translatable by 'either,' 'or' (e.g. iha čamutra vā, either here or hereafter; stri vā pumān vā yaččānyat satvām, either a woman or a man or any other being); and when a negative particle is joined with ča the two may then be translated by 'neither,' 'nor.' Occasionally one ča or one na may be omitted (e.g. na ča paribhoktum naiva śaknōmi hātum, I am able neither to enjoy nor to abandon; na pūrvāhṇe na ča pārṇhṇe, neither in the forenoon nor in the afternoon).

Ča is often joined to the adverbs eva, api, tathā, tathāiva, &c., either with or without a negative particle (e.g. vairiṇam nopaseveta sahāyam čaiva vairiṇaḥ, one ought not to serve either an enemy or the ally of an enemy). See eva, api, &c.

Ča sometimes = eva, even, indeed, certainly, just, &c. (e.g. su-čintitam čauśhadham na nāma-mātreṇa karoty a-rogam, even a well-devised remedy does not cure a disease by its mere name; yāvanta eva te tāvāśca sa, as great as they [were] just so great was he).

Ča may occasionally be disjunctive and be translated by 'but,' 'on the contrary,' 'on the other hand,' 'yet,' 'nevertheless' (e.g. varam ādyau na čāntimāḥ, better the two first but not the last; sāntam idam āśrama-padam sphurati ča bāhuḥ, this hermitage is tranquil yet my arm throbs).

Ča—ča may be used to express immediate connection between two acts or their simultaneous occurrence (e.g. mama ča muktaṃ tamasā mano manasijena dhanuṣi śarāśca niveṣitaḥ, no sooner is my mind freed from darkness than a shaft is fixed on his bow by the heart-born god).

Ča rarely = et, if (e.g. jvītum čelchase, if thou wishest to live).

Ča may be used as an expletive (e.g. anyaiśca kratubhīśca, and with other sacrifices). The native dictionaries assign to ča the following significations or forces:—conjunction (anu-čaya), collective combination (sam-āhāra), mutual connection (itaretara), and aggregation (sam-ucāya). For the meaning of ča after an interrogative see 2. ka, 2. kathā, &c.; [cf. Gr. τε; Lat. que, pe (in nempe, &c.); Goth. uh; Zend ča; Old Pers. ča.]

चित् çitra. See p. 323, col. 3.

चिद् çid, ind. [cf. 2. çā and id], an enclitic particle, requiring in the Veda a preceding simple verb to retain its accent. In the Pada-pāṭha çid is considered as an independent word (kaś çid &c. being always separated into two words). In later Sanskrit it is generally a particle affixed to interrogative pronouns to render them indefinite. The use of çid in Vedic Sanskrit is principally to lay stress or emphasis on a preceding word or to extend or limit the sense. Hence it is often translatable by 'even,' 'indeed,' 'also,' 'at least,' 'just,' 'merely,' &c. (e. g. devās çid, the gods indeed; ekasya çid, of one merely); or when preceded by a negative particle by 'not even' (e. g. na devās çid, not even the gods); but its force may often be expressed by merely laying an emphasis on the word by which it is preceded. Hence in Nirukta I. 4. it is said to be used pūjāyām, i. e. for enhancing the force of a word. It is also stated by Yaska to be a particle of comparison (upamārthe). The following Vedic uses of çid may be noted; yaç çid, yathā çid, = when indeed, as indeed; çid-çid or çid-çā or çid-u, = as well as—as; both—and.

Çid is often joined to interrogative pronouns and adverbs (see 2. ka, katama, katara, kaḍ, kim, katham, kaḍā, kutas, kva, &c.) to render them indefinite; especially in classical Sanskrit, where the only other word after which it is found is jātu, q. v.

be joined with the present indicative (e. g. mahyam ced dadāti tat, if he gives that to me); or with the future (e. g. trishṇāṃ cet tyakshyati, if he shall abandon avarice); or with the conditional (e. g. vṛishṭis ced abhaviṣyat, if there should have been rain); or with the potential (e. g. gaḥced cet, if he should go); or with the perfect (e. g. sa cen mānāra, when he died); or with a particle (e. g. kartavyam cet priyam mahyam, if a kindness is to be done to me). It should be observed that in the Veda the verb which depends on ced retains its accent.

The negative particle na may be prefixed to ced either immediately or separated from it (e. g. na ced vacah karishyati or na karishyati ced vacah, if he should not make a speech); and frequently the negative no is used in connection with ced, the verb being understood (e. g. dūram apasara no ced dhantavyo 'si mayā, depart to a distance, if not, i. e. if thou departest not, thou art to be killed by me). Sometimes no ced = api na, would that not! (e. g. no ced evaṃ kuryāt, would that he did not so!). Rarely yadi and ced are joined together, when ced may be translated by 'that is,' 'that is to say,' 'namely' (e. g. yadi ced rājyam avāpsyati, if, that is, he shall obtain the kingdom). In the argumentative writings of native commentators ced preceded by iti and followed by na is often placed at the end of an object's statement (e. g. 'Rig-vedam adhyemi' ityadi vākyam pramānam iti cen na, if it be urged that the text 'I peruse the Rig-veda' is a proof, no, it is not so). Attha ced, but if; [cf. ned.]

तद् tad, sa, sā, tad or tat, (the actual base of this pronoun in all the cases except the nom. sing. m. and f. is ta, but the neut. tad represents the base in compounds and in the derivative tādīya. In the Veda the nom. and acc. du. m. may be tā as well as taw, the nom. plur. n. tā as well as tāni, and the inst. plur. m. or n. tebhis as well as tais), he, she, it, that, this, (often occurring as a correlative of the relative pronoun ya, 'who, which,' the relative generally standing in the preceding clause, e. g. yasya buddhiḥ sa balavān, of whom there is intellect he is strong, see Gram. 799.)

Tad is sometimes used, for the sake of emphasis, in connection with the first and second personal pronouns, with other demonstratives and with relatives like the Lat. ille (e. g. so 'ham, I that very person, I myself; te vayam, we those very persons; tāv imau, those very two; tad etad, that very thing; yat tat kāraṇam, that very reason which; yā sā śrīḥ, that very fortune which).

Tad is repeated in the sense of 'this and that,' 'this or that,' 'various,' 'different' (e. g. taṁ taṁ deśam jagāma, he went to this and that place; tāsu tāsu yonishu, in different or various birth-places).

Tad is used in connection with a relative pronoun in the sense of 'whosoever,' 'whichever,' 'every' (e. g. yasmīn tasmin kule, in any family whatever). Sometimes both the demonstrative and the relative are repeated (e. g. yadyat karma para-vaśam tad-tad varjayet, whatever action depends on another, that he should avoid).

Tad, n., may be used to signify 'this world' [cf. idam]; also to denote 'the supreme spirit or Brahma' (opposed to ivam).

Tad, ind. there, thither, in that place, to that spot (e. g. tamāṁsi yatra gaḥchanti tat kravādo ajigamam, where dark shades prevail there I caused the flesh-eaters to go); then, at that time, in that case (e. g. yadī mān va vīhātum icchasi tat kim-artam panthāḥ samupa-dīsyate, if thou dost not wish to leave me why is the road pointed out?); thus, in this manner, with regard to that, in connection with that (often so used in the Brāhmaṇas, e. g. tad etau ślokau bhavataḥ, with reference to that there are these two verses); on that account, for that reason, therefore, consequently (in this sense commonly used in classical Sanskrit, e. g. yad—tad or yena—tad, because—therefore); now, so also, equally, in like manner (often connecting two sentences or clauses in the Brāhmaṇas). Tad api, and also, and equally; nevertheless, notwithstanding (yady api—tad api, even if—nevertheless); tad yathā, in such a manner as follows, as here follows, namely; taccāpi, and also, and likewise; [cf. Lith. tas, ta, 'this'; Goth. tha (the base of the article), masc. sa, fem. sō; Gr. δ, ή, τό; Slav. l'; ta, to; Lat. is-te, is-ta, is-tud, tam, tum, tunc; Hib. so 'this,' se 'he,' si 'she.')] — Tac-chīla (tad-śī'), as, ā, am, having an inclination for that, accustomed to that; [cf. tācchīlīka and tācchīlyā.] — Taj-ja (tad-ja'), as, ā, am, 'produced at that moment,' immediate, instantaneous. — Taj-jaya (tad-ja'), as, m, the conquest of that. — Taj-ja-lān (tad-ja-la-an), n, n, produced, absorbed, and breathing in that. — Taj-jña (tad-jña'), as, ā, am, knowing that, knowing, experienced in or familiar with; (as), m, a knowing or intelligent man, (in this and other compounds tad often loses its meaning and becomes redundant; cf. tat-para, tad-bhāva, &c.). — Tat-kara, as, ā, am, performing a particular work or service, serving, obeying, a servant. — Tat-kartavya, as, ā, am, proper or necessary to be done with reference to present circumstances; [cf. iti-kartavya.] — Tat-kāla, as, m, that time (opposed to etat-kāla, this time); present time, time being, the time referred to or spoken of, of the same time, the time when an act occurs; (am), ind. at that time, at a certain time; directly, immediately; (as, ā, am), happening at the same time or immediately; [cf. tātkālika.] — Tatkāla-dhī, is, īs, ī, wise or intelligent for the time being, having presence of mind, &c. — Tatkāla-lavaṇa, am, n. a kind of salt prepared artificially, = vid-lavaṇa. — Tatkālot-panna-dhī ('la-ut'), is, īs, ī, possessed of presence of mind. — Tat-kulina, as, ā, am, belonging to that family or caste. — Tat-kriya, as, ā, am, performing a particular work or service; working without hire or wages. — Tat-kṣaṇa, as, m, time present, time being; the same moment; a measure of time, = 120 Kṣaṇas, = १० Lava; (am or āt), ind. at the same moment, immediately, directly. — Tat-kṣaṇa-bhaṅgura, as, ā, am, vanishing immediately, transient. — Tat-trītiya, as, ā, am, doing that for the third time. — Tat-pada, am, n. the place or position of that; the word tad; (as), m, the tree Ficus Religiosa. — Tat-para, as, ā, am, following that or thereupon, coming after, inferior; having that as one's highest object or aim, totally devoted or addicted to anything, attending to anything closely, eagerly engaged in (with loc. or in composition); diligent; (as), m, the thirtieth part of the twinkling of the eye; (with reference to the redundant use of tad cf. taj-jña, tad-gata, tad-bhāva, tāparya.) — Tatpara-tā, f, or tatpara-tva, am, n. entire devotion or addiction to; the state of following after or behind, inferiority. — Tat-parāyana, as, ā, am, attached or addicted to any particular thing or person. — Tat-purusha, as, m, the original or supreme spirit; the servant or attendant of him; a class of compounds in which the last member is defined or qualified by the first without losing its original independence, i. e. continues the principal member of the compound and preserves its original grammatical character whether as a noun, adjective, or participle, whereas in a Bahu-vrīhi compound the last member loses its independence as well as its original grammatical character and serves together with the first member only to qualify or define another word; the Karma-dhāraya and Dvigu compounds are considered as subdivisions of the Tat-purusha class. The word tat-purusha, 'his servant,' is itself an example of this class of compounds.
